PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 81st CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

SENATE

MONDAY, JANUARY 3, 1949

The 3d day of January being the day prescribed by the Constitution of the United States for the annual meeting of Congress, the first session of the Eighty-first Congress commenced this day.

The Senate assembled in its Chamber at the Capitol.

ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, President pro tempore, called the Senate to order at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., of Washington, D. C., offered the following

PRAYER

O Lord our God, look with favor upon the Members of the Senate, and bless each one of them according to his needs. May they be aware of a mandate higher than that of the ballot box, a mandate from Thee, to legislate wisely and well. We believe that Thou wilt accept these men as representatives of the people, and art willing to work in them and through them that they may become instruments of Thy will. Grant that they be willing to have it so, through Jesus Christ our Lord, who taught us to pray together:

Our Father which art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever.

Amen.

ADMINISTRATION OF OATH

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first privileged order of business this morning is the administration of the oath to the 32 Senators-elect. Under the practice of the Senate they will proceed to the desk by fours, alphabetically, to take the oath of office. The clerk will call the names of the first four Senators-elect.

The Chief Clerk (Edward E. Mansur, Jr.) called the names of Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. BROUGHTON, and Mr. CHAPMAN.

These Senators, escorted by Mr. BARKLEY, Mr. TOBEY, and Mr. HOEY, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the President pro tempore.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Mr. CORDON, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. EASTLAND, and Mr. ELLENDER.

These Senators, escorted by Mr. MORSE, Mr. LUCAS, Mr. STENNIS, and Mr. LONG, respectively, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office prescribed by law was administered to them by the President pro tempore.

The Chief Clerk called the names of Mr. SCHOEPPEL, Mrs. SMITH, Mr. SPARKMAN, and Mr. WHERRY.

These Senators, escorted by Mr. REED, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. HILL, and Mr. BUTLER, respectively, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office was administered to them by the President pro tempore.

ALBEN W. BARKLEY

Mr. BARKLEY rose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair notes that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] rises and asks for recognition. Before the Chair recognizes the Senator from Kentucky he would like to assume that he has unanimous consent to say a word to him upon this first occasion when he has appeared in this Chamber since his recent election. [Applause, Senators rising.]

Assuming the unanimous consent of the Senate, the Chair would like to offer two or three observations.

As a result of the recent accident [laughter], the distinguished senior Senator from Kentucky will soon lose his right to stand upon this floor and be recognized. He will soon lose his right of free speech within these walls. He will soon lose his vote. In fact, his civil liberties are disintegrating faster than in any other instance the Chair recalls. [Laughter.] But as a result of the same accident the senior Senator from Michigan is about to recognize the Senator from Kentucky, or any other Senator, for the last time. [Laughter.]

It seems to the Chair that this makes the occasion something of an event for both the senior Senator from Kentucky and the senior Senator from Michigan. Therefore, the President pro tempore, with great emphasis on the Latin part of that title, would like to say to the Senator from Kentucky—and he knows he speaks for the entire body—that though he may lack the right of recognition on the floor, many other recognitions can never be taken from him.

There will always be the recognition of the fact that he is one of the great Senators of his time and generation. [Applause.]

There will always be recognition of integrity without a blemish through more than three decades of public service beneath the dome of the Capitol of the Republic.

There will always be recognition of difficult achievements in successful leadership during critical times when his fidelity as a partisan was always matched by his faithfulness as a patriot and by his constant courtesy and good faith toward those of us in loyal opposition.

There will always be recognition of courage and eloquence. There will always be recognition of patience and humility. There will always be recognition of rare capacity for friendly fellowship. There will always be recognition of a great, human soul.

The Chair recognizes the next Vice President of the United States. [Applause, Senators rising.]

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the generosity of the Chair and of my colleagues here has almost made me forget the purpose for which I rose. That was to submit a formal resolution following the ascertainment of a quorum of the Senate. I will not submit that resolution, however, until I have very feebly expressed my deep appreciation not only of what the President pro tempore has said but of the response made by my colleagues here without regard to politics upon this occasion.

There was one thing about the remarks of the President pro tempore which disturbed me a little, and that was the evident pleasure, if not hilarity, with which he announced that he was retiring from the chair. Inasmuch as I am to enter upon what Vice President Marshall called a 4-year period of silence when he took the oath of office as Vice President, I am somewhat disturbed about the pleasure with which the Chair retires from the position of President of the Senate.

I recognize the fact that by this transfer I shall lose a good many of my civil liberties; but I presume there are some liberties that the Chair may assume while occupying the chair that are equal to civil liberties—provided they are always civil. [Laughter.]

I do not know how I shall adjust myself to the role of Presiding Officer. I have been here in what I call the "bull pen" for so many years that I fear that some day I may walk down from the rostrum, roll up my sleeves, and begin to engage in debate, to be called down by whoever happens to be in the chair at the time.

I thank the Chair and my colleagues for their generous demonstration. I am not sure whether that demonstration and that evidence of favor and good will is due to the fact that I am getting out of the Senate, or that I am going to preside over it. Whatever may have prompted it—and I accept it in good faith—I greatly appreciate the good will which the Chair has shown, and the cordiality and respect with which we have dealt with one another here in the legislative process during the years of my membership in the Senate.

The Senate of the United States comes in for its share of criticism and denunciation, and it comes in now and then for what I think is an overplay of contemptuous asseverations with respect to its processes; but after all, with all its failings and shortcomings—and they are outstanding in some respects—it yet remains the one great forum for the debate of legislation and for the working out of the democratic process among the nations of the world. It will be a sad day in the history of this country if the United States Senate—or, for that matter, the House of Representatives—ceases to be the forum where men express their opinions and advocate whatever appeals to their judgment and their conscience in the process of making our Nation a greater example of democracy and self-government.

I leave this seat with sentiments of deep regret. I leave it with a sense of appreciation, not only, but with a sense of humility. I realize how far short I may fall in the performance of my duty as the Presiding Officer of this body. But with the cooperation and good will of Members on both sides, I hope I may discharge the duties acceptably to the Senate and to the country, and in fulfillment of our ideals of democracy.

Before I submit the resolution to which I have referred, I wish also to say a word in regard to the retiring Presiding Officer of the Senate of the United States. Because of the death of President Roosevelt and the assumption of the Presidency by the then Vice President, Mr. Truman, the Senator from Michigan became, to all intents and purposes, Vice President of the United States, in the sense that he is President of the Senate.

During my membership in this body and during my observation of it, no man has ever occupied that position with greater dignity, greater force, or greater understanding of the proprieties of leadership, not only in the Senate, but as the Presiding Officer of the Senate, than has the Senator from Michigan, who is about to retire. We have all enjoyed his performance of the function of Presiding Officer of the Senate. We have respected his views in regard to decisions. Though sometimes disagreeing with them, we have always known that his decisions and rulings came out of a deep consciousness of his obligation to the Senate and to the country.

While I cannot say in all candor that I am sorry that the Senator from Michigan is retiring from the position of President pro tempore, because in the very nature of things, politics being what it is, we must have another President pro tempore, I will say that if we had not won the election last November, and if there were not to be a Vice President of the United States—as there has not been for now nearly 4 years—and we had to have a Republican President pro tempore, I would rather the Senator from Michigan would preside over the Senate than any other man. [Applause.]

Mr. President, I now submit the resolution, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests to the Senator from Kentucky that it might be advisable to have a quorum call first.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. I beg the Chair's pardon. I intended to suggest the absence of a quorum, but the eloquence of the Chair frustrated me.

I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 1), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee consisting of two Senators be appointed to join such committee as may be appointed by the House of Representatives to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that a quorum of each House is assembled and that the Congress is ready to receive any communication he may be pleased to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. BARKLEY and Mr. WHERRY the committee on the part of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE

Mr. WHERRY submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 2), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary inform the House of Representatives that a quorum of the Senate is assembled and that the Senate is ready to proceed to business.

HOUR OF DAILY MEETING

Mr. LUCAS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 3), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the hour of daily meeting of the Senate be 12 o'clock meridian, unless otherwise ordered.

ELECTION OF PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will now proceed to the election of its officers.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I sent to the desk, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With full anticipation of its sinister purpose, the Chair orders the clerk to read the resolution.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 4), as follows:

Resolved, That Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, be, and he is hereby, elected President of the Senate pro tempore, to hold office during the pleasure of the Senate, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate adopted on the 12th day of March 1890, on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to consider the resolution.

The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to suggest that there is nothing sinister at any time about the performance of one's duty. Therefore, I offer the resolution.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the resolution, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out the words, "Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR, a Senator from the State of Tennessee," and insert the words, "Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, a Senator from the State of Michigan."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky stole my speech, earlier today, about my candidate. I wish to endorse everything he said about our candidate's qualifications and the respect in which he is held not only on this side of the aisle but on the other side of the aisle, as well. I wish to say that the Republican conference unanimously has asked me to present this name; and I can think of no higher tribute of love and affection which we hold for the senior Senator from Michigan who is, as he has said, about to retire, than to place his name in nomination.

I recommend to Senators on the other side of the aisle their worthy consideration of the unanimous choice of the Republican conference as President pro tempore.

Mr. BARKLEY. There is nothing sinister about that; is there?

Mr. WHERRY. There is nothing sinister about it, except I think we should have a yea-and-nay vote, if that meets with the approval of all Senators present. I think that is proper, at least. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska to the resolution offered by the Senator from Kentucky. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MCKELLAR (when his name was called). Mr. President, as I am advised, I have a pecuniary interest in the result of this vote; I am so advised by the present President pro tempore of the Senate. Having a pecuniary interest, in the shape of a car that is assigned while I hold the office, I ask unanimous consent to be excused from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Tennessee will be noted as voting "present."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who are necessarily absent, would vote "nay" if present.

The result was announced—yeas 40, nays 50, answered "present" 2, as follows:

YEAS—40

| Aiken | Hendrickson | Saltonstall |

NOT VOTING—4

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Chavez | Magnuson | Wagner |
| Langer | | |

So Mr. WHERRY's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Ordinarily the senior Senator from Michigan would be entitled to the privilege from the floor of escorting his long-time and very precious friend, the Senator from Tennessee, to the chair to assume his new responsibilities. Since he cannot perform that function, he asks the next senior Member on the Republican side of the Senate, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], to escort the President pro tempore-elect to the chair, to receive the oath and take over.

Thereupon, Mr. McKELLAR, escorted by Mr. BRIDGES, advanced to the desk, and the oath was administered to him by the retiring President pro tempore.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Members of the Senate, I present the new President pro tempore. [Applause, Senators rising.]

ELECTION OF SECRETARY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it gives me peculiar pleasure to offer the resolution, which I now send to the desk and for which I ask immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The legislative clerk (Emery L. Frazier) read the resolution (S. Res. 5), and the Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to its consideration, as follows:

Resolved, That Leslie L. Biffle, of Arkansas, be, and he is hereby, elected Secretary of the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the resolution, to strike out the name "Leslie L. Biffle" and substitute "Carl A. Loeffler."

The amendment was rejected.

The resolution was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appoints the retiring Secretary a committee of one to escort Mr. Biffle to the desk for the administration of the oath.

Mr. Biffle, escorted by Mr. Loeffler, advanced to the desk, and the oath of office was administered to him by the President pro tempore. [Applause on the floor.]

ELECTION OF SERGEANT AT ARMS AND DOORKEEPER

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 6), which was read and considered, by unanimous consent, as follows:

Resolved, That Joseph C. Duke, of Arizona, be, and he is hereby, elected Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to strike out the name "Joseph C. Duke" and insert "Edward F. McGinnis."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on behalf of the group of Senators on this side of the aisle, I am sure I speak the view of the entire Senate when I now express deep appreciation to Mr. McGinnis, who has served us so efficiently and faithfully during his term as Sergeant at Arms of the Senate. He has had a very brilliant record in and out of the Senate; he has a great record as a veteran of both World Wars, and he has demonstrated once again that when it comes to carrying out the rules of the Senate, be it against a Republican or Democrat, it is possible to enforce them fairly, impartially, and in a nonpartisan manner.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I rise to say substantially what has already been so well said by my friend the Senator from Oregon. It has been my privilege to observe, as have all of us, the work of Mr. McGinnis as Sergeant at Arms of this body. As has been said, he served his country well in the capacity of a sergeant in the Army in the First World War, and in the capacity of commander in the Navy in the Second World War. He has distinguished himself in this body by his courtesy and attention to duty. Should the amendment which has been proposed with respect to him not be adopted he will retire with the respect, admiration, and affection of the Members of the Senate.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am opposed to the amendment, but I wish to say a word with respect to the life, character, and public service of Ed McGinnis. He is a veteran of both World Wars, and between them was one of the most active members of the American Legion in the Nation. I have met him at a number of national conventions of that organization. He is a loyal and patriotic American who has served his country well in war and in peace; and as he relinquishes his office of Sergeant at Arms, I am sure he carries with him the best wishes of all Senators on this side of the aisle, who appreciate his efficient and courteous service.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, before we vote on the amendment I wish to add just a word in expression of our appreciation of the courtesy with which not only Mr. McGinnis has performed the duties of Sergeant at Arms, but of the courtesy with which Mr. Carl Loeffler has performed the duties of Secretary of the Senate. I think Carl Loeffler has been an employee of the Senate for probably as long as anyone else connected with the Senate, if not longer. I had occasion to refer to that fact a year or two ago.

I did not know Mr. McGinnis until he became Sergeant at Arms of the Senate, but I have appreciated and have taken note frequently of his courtesy, his efficiency, and his devotion to the interests of the Senate.

I did not want this occasion to pass without expressing my appreciation, and, I am sure, that of all of us, regarding these two gentlemen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the resolution as originally offered.

The resolution was agreed to.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 7), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the President of the United States be notified of the election of Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, as President of the Senate pro tempore, and of Leslie L. Biffle, of Arkansas, as Secretary of the Senate.

NOTIFICATION TO THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 8), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the House of Representatives be notified of the election of Hon. KENNETH MCKELLAR, a Senator from the State of Tennessee, as President of the Senate pro tempore, and of Leslie L. Biffle, of Arkansas, as Secretary of the Senate.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY FOR THE MAJORITY

Mr. BARKLEY submitted a resolution (S. Res. 9), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Felton M. Johnston, of Mississippi, be, and he is hereby, elected secretary for the majority of the Senate.

ELECTION OF SECRETARY FOR THE MINORITY

Mr. BRIDGES submitted a resolution (S. Res. 10), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That J. Mark Trice, of Maryland, be, and he is hereby, elected secretary for the minority of the Senate.

COUNT OF ELECTORAL VOTE

Mr. HAYDEN submitted a concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 1), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the two Houses of Congress shall meet in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Thursday, the 6th day of January, 1949, at 1 o'clock postmeridian, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws relating to the election of President and Vice President of the United States, and the President pro tempore of the Senate shall be their presiding officer; that two tellers shall be previously appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate on the part of the Senate and two by the Speaker on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President pro tempore of the Senate, all the certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and acted upon in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted in the manner and according to the rules by law provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President pro tempore of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons, if any, elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the Journals of the two Houses.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I should like to offer a suggestion as to a change in the language of the resolution as read. As I remember the reading of it, it says "in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A." Is it not a reflection on the Congress to suggest that the alphabet begin with any other letter than the letter A? [Laughter.]

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I desire to make a brief statement with respect to the order of business. It is customary and is the precedent in the Senate that no bills, resolutions, or other documents of any kind are introduced until after the conclusion of the President's message on the state of the Union. I respectfully request that that precedent and custom be adhered to.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Illinois that so far as a resolution which I intended to submit today is concerned, I shall not present it at this time. I shall be very glad to comply with the practice and custom of the Senate, and shall introduce my antifilibuster resolution at the session of the Senate held immediately after the President's state of the Union message.

ADJOURNMENT TO WEDNESDAY

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, there will be no session of the Senate tomorrow. I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon on Wednesday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Wednesday, January 5, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 3, 1949

This being the day fixed by the twentieth amendment of the Constitution for the annual meeting of the Congress of the United States, the Members of the House of Representatives of the Eighty-first Congress met in their Hall, and at 12 o'clock noon were called to order by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, Hon. John Andrews.

The Chaplain of the Eightieth Congress, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following

PRAYER

Glory be to Thy name, O Lord God of hosts; let Thy work appear unto Thy servants. As we wait in this sacred stillness, we beseech Thee to bless abundantly our country. We pray for that guidance which enables us to weave characters which will stand the judgment of time, for the worth of life is measured not by the distance traveled but by the road taken.

Grant that these Thy servants may safeguard and advance the rights of all, free from discord and intolerance, and bind us together with an invincible purpose to labor for justice and freedom without compromise.

Let the Congress unite in praying the Lord's Prayer:

Our Father, who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil. For Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever.

Amen.

The CLERK. Representatives-elect, this is the day fixed by the Constitution for the meeting of the Eighty-first Congress. Certificates of election covering the 435 seats in the Eighty-first Congress have been received by the Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Eightieth Congress, and the names of those persons whose credentials show that they were regularly elected as Representatives in accordance with the laws of their respective States or of the United States will be called. As the roll is called, following the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the State of Alabama, Representatives-elect will please answer to their names to determine whether a quorum is present.

The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll by States, and the following Representatives-elect answered to their names:

The CLERK. The roll call discloses the presence of 420 Members. A quorum is present.

STATEMENT REGARDING CERTAIN CREDENTIALS

The CLERK. A certificate of election is on file in the Clerk's office, showing the election of JOHN C. DAVIES as a Representative-elect to the Eighty-first Congress from the Thirty-fifth Congressional District of the State of New York.

Several communications have been received from the executive deputy secretary of state for the State of New York informing the Clerk that a case is pending before the supreme court, Albany County, N. Y., and that the said secretary of state is restrained from certifying the election of a Representative from this congressional district. However, in view of the fact that a certificate of election in due form has been filed with the Clerk by JOHN C. DAVIES, the Clerk has therefore placed his name on the roll.

The Clerk will state that credentials, regular in form, have been filed, showing the election of the Honorable E. L. BARTLETT as Delegate from the Territory of Alaska and the Honorable JOSEPH R. FARRINGTON as Delegate from the Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk has also received a certification of election signed by the Governor of Puerto Rico, showing the election of the Honorable A. FERNÓS-ISERN, as Resident Commissioner for a term of 4 years beginning January 3, 1949.

Since the regular election of Representatives to the Eighty-first Congress one change has occurred as a result of which one vacancy now exists in the Seventh Congressional District of the State of New York, occasioned by the death of the late Honorable John J. Delaney.

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

The CLERK. The next business in order is the election of a Speaker of the House. Nominations are now in order.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Clerk.

The CLERK. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. WALTER. As chairman of the Democratic caucus, I am directed by the unanimous vote of the caucus to present for election to the office of Speaker of the House of Representatives for the Eighty-first Congress the name of the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, Representative-elect from the State of Texas.

Mr. EATON. Mr. Clerk.

The CLERK. The gentleman from New Jersey is recognized.

Mr. EATON. By authority, by direction, and by unanimous vote of the Republican conference representing the minority of this House, I have the honor to nominate for Speaker of the House of Representatives the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., a Representative-elect from the State of Massachusetts to the Eighty-first Congress.

The CLERK. The Honorable SAM RAYBURN, a Representative-elect from the State of Texas, and the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., a Representative-elect from the State of Massachusetts, have been placed in nomination. Are there further nominations? [After a pause.] There being no further nominations, the Clerk will appoint the gentlewoman from New Jersey [Mrs. NORTON], the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SIKES], the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. HARDEN], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CORBETT] to act as tellers.

The roll will now be called and those responding will indicate by surname the nominee of their choice.

The tellers will please take their places at the desk in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

The tellers having taken their places, the House proceeded to vote for Speaker.

The following is the result of the vote:

The CLERK. The tellers agree in their tally. The total number of votes cast is 416, of which the Honorable SAM RAYBURN has received 255, and the Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR., 160; 1 "present." Therefore the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, a Representative-elect from the State of Texas, having received the majority of all the votes cast, is duly elected Speaker of the House of Representatives of the Eighty-first Congress.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARTIN], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK], the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN] will please escort the Speaker-elect to the chair.

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Ladies and gentlemen of the House, 2 years ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] and I both were on this platform at the beginning of the session. At that time he paid a most glowing tribute to me. You know, at that time, Sam, I really thought you meant it. I did not think you were giving an "Indian gift" to be recalled within 2 years. Seriously, it is a pleasant duty that I have to perform this morning, if we had to have a Democratic Congress. Any regrets that I might have concerning the Speakership decision are mitigated by your splendid choice. You have elected a Member of the House as Speaker who has served for nearly a third of a century in this great debating Chamber. He is a man of great ability, of rare parliamentary acumen, and skillful in debate. He is devoted to his country and to upholding all the fine traditions of Congress. We are very fortunate that we have selected that type of man as Speaker of the House. He has been my friend for 25 years and that friendship has been highly cherished. It is one of the compensations of service, the true and loyal friends we make here. So it is a pleasant duty that I have today.

I am very happy to present to you a man who is a great Speaker, one who, when he completes this term, will have served longer than any other man as Speaker of the House. To achieve that goal one must have ability, fairness, integrity, and character, and our Speaker has all these sterling attributes. It is a privilege and pleasure for me to present your new Speaker of the House, the Honorable SAM RAYBURN, of Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. MARTIN, and my colleagues in the House of Representatives of the Eighty-first Congress, I would be less than human if I were not deeply touched by the tribute that my old friend JOE MARTIN has just paid me. One of the beautiful things about service in this House is that personal relationships and personal friendships are not divided by any center aisle. Some of the nearest and dearest friends I have ever had in the House of Representatives were on the left of the Speaker's stand. I hope it may always be so.

Especially to my Democratic colleagues, who have again conferred upon me this high honor, allow me to say that I and my family shall never cease to hold in grateful memory this gracious thing you have done for me and for them.

I am happy, of course, not only as a party man but personally, that this honor has come to me again, but I might say to you and all of you today that at this time I occupy the place that has been my supreme and only ambition in American politics since I began here many years ago as a very young man. I am charged with a great responsibility. The thrill of being elected to this office the second time does not quite compare with what it was the first time, but I have already expressed to you my gratitude for calling me to this place again. As I said to my colleagues in the Democratic caucus on last Saturday, I feel more that it is a call to duty, to hard work, and I am sure my friend who is retiring from this place will say that some of it approaches drudgery.

I want to work with you. I will be fair. I will try to be helpful to each and every Member of this House with his personal problems, and to all the Democrats with their political problems.

A call has come to us as Members of this House and as the Democratic Party, from the Chief Executive down, a call to duty and a tremendous and crushing responsibility.

We have the most prosperous country upon the face of the earth, more prosperous than this or any other nation ever was, from an economic standpoint as well as from a potential military standpoint. God forbid that our military might should ever be called into action again, but potentially, from a military standpoint, we are the most powerful nation that ever existed in the world. Not even the Caesars in the age in which they lived, when they thought they bestrode the world like colossi, were as powerful as the United States of America is capable of being now.

On matters of great national interest, national defense, the preservation of our liberty and keeping the leadership of the world that has been thrust upon us in recent years, I feel certain there will be little division at the center aisle. On great questions of international affairs on which we are again trying to assert and to keep, and to be of service by having, this world leadership, it has been gratifying to me in the past 2 years, and I feel certain I will be gratified in the next 2 years, that on those great questions of whether we live and remain free, whether there is a world that is fit to live in, we will not divide at the center aisle. I have that faith and confidence in the men and women with whom I shall have the pleasure and honor of working.

On many domestic issues we will divide. You, individually, were not called by the American people to solve such issues. The Democratic Party has been called upon to solve them, and we will miss our mark and fail in our duty if we do not live up to the expectation of the American people.

With as little division as possible, I trust, we could go far toward the accomplishment of these great purposes, doing great things for our own country, that it may remain the freest, the most prosperous, and the most powerful government upon the face of the earth.

Again allow me to thank you and to say that it shall be my unfailing purpose to serve you in this capacity in a fashion that will not be displeasing to you, and that in this position of responsibility I may accept the challenge to higher and better service. Again I thank you.

The Chair will ask the dean of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], to administer the oath of office.

Mr. SABATH then administered the oath of office to Mr. RAYBURN.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. When I first came here, it was the policy in administering the oath of office to Representatives-elect to call the States, and for the Representatives-elect to take the oath of office when their State was called. It was, I believe, during the time when Nicholas Longworth was Speaker that he inaugurated the policy of swearing in all of the Members at one time. Therefore, if the Members will rise, the Chair will administer the oath of office.

The Members and Delegates-elect rose and the Speaker administered to them the oath of office.

The Chair will do his best to refer as many bills as possible but he will ask the indulgence of Members if he is unable to refer all of them that may be introduced. Those bills which are not referred and do not appear in the daily RECORD as of today will be included in the next day's RECORD and printed with a date as of today. The Chair feels that he should make this statement at this time so Members may be aware of the difficulties that immediately present themselves.

THE LATE GEORGE CROMWELL SCOTT

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOEVEN. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I announce to the House of Representatives the death of a former Member, the Honorable George Cromwell Scott. Mr. Scott passed away at his home in Sioux City, Iowa, on October 6, 1948, at the age of 84 years.

Born on August 8, 1864, in Monroe County, N. Y., he was orphaned at an early age; and when he was 16, moved to Iowa, where he worked on a farm while studying law. Being admitted to the Iowa bar in 1887, the young lawyer began his practice in the city of Le Mars, and in 1901 he transferred his practice to Sioux City, which became his permanent home. He was elected as a Republican to the Sixty-second Congress from the Eleventh Congressional District to fill a vacancy caused by the death of Elbert H. Hubbard, and took his seat on December 12, 1912. He was subsequently reelected to the Sixty-third and Sixty-fifth Congresses, after which time he retired from political life. The Eleventh Congressional District was formerly a part of the present Eighth Congressional District which I have the honor to represent.

Mr. Scott maintained a partnership with William Milchrist and Harry W. Pitkin of Sioux City until 1922, when he was nominated by President Harding as judge of the United States District Court for the Northern District of Iowa, in which capacity he served until his retirement. It was on the bench, perhaps, that he won his greatest distinction, his judgment on matters of law commanding wide consideration. With the possible exception of his ruling in a labor case, the case in his court that attracted the greatest national attention was that of Oscar M. Hartzell, promoter of the alleged Drake estate fraud.

Judge Scott was a man of high character. He was a man of sagacity and great ability, a conscientious legislator, and a patriotic American. Through his friendship, I know the high principles which have guided him throughout the years of his splendid service in the interest of his State and his country. I express my deep sorrow at his passing. As a fellow Iowan, I share in the feeling of pride toward his accomplishments. The State of Iowa has lost a truly great citizen.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 5, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, give us the long view of our work and our world.

Help us to see that it is better to fail in a cause that will ultimately succeed than to succeed in a cause that will ultimately fail.

Guide us how to work and then teach us how to wait. O Lord, we pray in the name of Jesus, who was never in a hurry. Amen.

REPORT ON LEND-LEASE OPERATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States of America:

I am transmitting herewith the twenty-sixth report of operations under the Lend-Lease Act.

The attached "Report on Lend-Lease Fiscal Operations" was prepared by the Treasury Department and submitted to the Secretary of State in accordance with Executive Order No. 9726. The period covered is from March 11, 1941, through September 30, 1947.

Activities to complete fulfillment of the various "pipe line" agreements have continued since the issuance of the twenty-fifth report.

A final settlement agreement was signed with Norway on February 24, 1948. In March Haiti paid the balance due on its account. An arrangement was concluded with Brazil on April 15, 1948, fixing the terms of payment of the amount due under the original master agreement with Brazil.

As stated in chapter 4 of the Twenty-Third Lend-Lease Report, one of the important remaining lend-lease functions is the collection of payments due under various international agreements. Some of these agreements involve matters other than lend-lease, such as surplus property and claims. Recent payments arising out of agreements covering lend-lease, and in some cases other matters as well, are shown in the following list:

Brazil: $5,000,000 principal paid on July 15, 1948; installment on its remaining lend-lease obligations.

France: $13,000,000 interest paid in francs on July 1, 1948, under Settlement Agreement dated May 28, 1946.

Iran: $711,753.40 paid on April 29 and $711,753.40 on July 15, 1948, principal under Settlement Agreement dated December 21, 1945.

Netherlands: $960,000 interest paid in dollars on June 30, 1948, under Settlement Agreement dated May 28, 1947.

United Kingdom: $76,617.50 paid on March 31, $262,112.50 on April 30, $403,250 on May 28, and $403,250 on June 15, 1948 (paid in pounds), principal under Settlement Agreement dated December 6, 1945.

REPORT ON ASSISTANCE TO GREECE AND TURKEY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

Transmitted herewith in accordance with the provisions of Public Law 75 (80th Cong., 1st sess., 61 Stat. 103) is the fourth quarterly report of expenditures and activities in conjunction with the program for aid to Greece and Turkey.

This legislation was enacted at a critical juncture in the history of the struggle for peace, involving the right of small nations to self-determination of their future. The conspicuous success of this program in enabling the people of Greece to meet the military and economic crisis which confronted them, and in supporting the Turkish determination to remain independent in the face of external pressure, has contributed significantly toward stabilizing this strategic area of the world in the interest of world peace.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 4, 1948.

REPORT ON MILITARY ASSISTANCE TO GREECE AND TURKEY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States which, with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

To the Congress of the United States:

Transmitted herewith is the fifth quarterly report—covering the first quarter of the fiscal year 1949—on United States military assistance to Greece and Turkey. Military aid to Greece and Turkey was inaugurated under the authority of Public Law 75, Eightieth Congress, and was continued under the authority of title III of Public Law 472, Eightieth Congress, known as the Greek-Turkish Assistance Act of 1948. Responsibility for United States assistance in the economic rehabilitation of Greece begun under Public Law 75 was, pursuant to Public Law 472, title I, transferred effective July 1, 1948, to the Economic Cooperation Administration, and results are reported to the Congress under that title.

The encouraging prospect for substantial elimination of the Greek guerrilla forces which existed at the time of the victory of the Greek National Army in the Grammos Mountains and which was referred to in the report for the period ending June 30, 1948, has unfortunately not materialized. A military stalemate has ensued which has prolonged the struggle. The United States is, of course, through the American Mission for Aid to Greece, continuing to deliver to the Greeks necessary military supplies and equipment and to advise and assist the Greek armed forces, in accordance with the assistance act.

RECESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. What is the further pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if there is no business immediately to come before the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess until 20 minutes to 1 o'clock, whereupon we will proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 16 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 12 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.

At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES—THE PRESIDENT'S ANNUAL MESSAGE

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to listen to the delivery of the President's annual message, and that, immediately upon the conclusion of the joint session, the Senate reassemble in its Chamber and resume its session.

The motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL STATEMENT

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a very brief statement, of which I am sure most Senators will approve.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, last Monday the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] was sworn in for his third term as a Member of this body. The conference of Republican Senators did not end the meeting on that day until a few minutes before the convening of the Senate. As chairman of that conference, it was my duty to brief the press about the proceedings of the conference meeting. By the time that had been done, my distinguished colleague had taken the oath of office.

I doubt whether Senators of different political faiths from any State have a finer personal or official relationship than that which exists between the senior and junior Senators from Colorado. I make this statement so that there cannot be any possible misunderstanding as to why I had to forego the honor and privilege, which I had anticipated, of escorting my colleague to the desk on that occasion.

STATEMENT OF VIEWS AND RESOLUTIONS BY AMERICAN MUNICIPAL ASSOCIATION

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, the American Municipal Association held its twenty-fifth annual conference here in Washington earlier this month. This association is the national federation of 42 State leagues and of 9,500 member city, town, borough, and village governments of all sizes.

During the conference this year six important statements of national municipal policy and several resolutions of broad national interest were adopted. These are the beliefs and the aims of the Nation's municipal governments. All of them are of considerable interest to the Members of the Congress.

I appreciate the privilege of having been asked by the national association to submit these statements to the Senate, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOUSING—WHAT IS THE MUNICIPAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR HOUSING?

Municipalities are vitally concerned about the housing needs of their citizens.

To date those needs have not been adequately met.

Inadequate housing creates additional municipal problems and increases municipal expenditures.

We believe a solution can be found within the framework of our democratic institutions.

The responsibility of the municipality in that solution lies:

First. In adequate planning of our cities and neighborhoods;

Second. Through urban redevelopment statutes including exercise of power of eminent domain to assist in acquiring proper sites and regulations for construction of adequate housing;

Third. In the elimination of slums after provision has been made for rehousing occupants of the slums;

Fourth. In doing our reasonable share by way of subsidies or otherwise to make such housing possible;

Fifth. That the American Municipal Association urge Federal and State governments to undertake an intelligent and complete program of housing, including provision for research into lower-cost production techniques, using to the fullest extent the machinery of private enterprise, and using Federal credit for extension of mortgage loans and reducing interest payments, thereby expanding opportunities for private ownership.

Sixth. We urge the Eighty-first Congress to immediately pass housing legislation similar to the original T-E-W bill to begin again the basic urban task of our Nation's slum clearance. We feel that this legislation should provide sufficient funds for long-term Federal loans and subsidy contracts for slum clearance and construction of low-rent public housing for low-income groups including the construction of permanent low-rent housing projects to replace temporary war and veterans' housing projects.

We urge legislation to permit completion of previously authorized war-frozen housing projects by granting additional loans and raising per room limits in accordance with inflation trends.

Seventh. That any Federal action for disposal of temporary wartime housing should be carried out only after mutual understanding with local officials of the community where such units are situated, and that none of the temporary housing ever be sold to private interests except for the purpose of demolition.

RESPECT AND RECOGNITION OF MUNICIPAL OFFICIALS

Municipal officials and employees must take the lead in creating respect and recognition for themselves and their public positions. In this effort they should seek the help of the press and radio and the cooperation of civic and industrial leaders. They cannot expect respect unless their personal conduct and the general quality of their administration warrants it. First, responsibility lies with the officials themselves.

Municipal employees should be selected, paid, and promoted on the basis of their individual competence and value to their governments. Appointive employees should be retained while their services are satisfactory. Adequate retirement allowances should be provided so that employees may leave when they are too old to be most effective and so that younger persons can succeed to places of responsibility. Municipal positions should pay the same compensation, job for job, as private employment, assuming all other conditions of employment are comparable.

A program of public relations is needed in each municipality to tell what the government and its employees do and why they deserve the respect and recognition of the people whom they serve from day to day.

A program of public relations must also keep the avenues of communication open so that appropriate municipal personnel may keep accurately informed concerning the desires and the attitudes of the citizens whom they serve, since that is equally stressed by personnel men with the function of interpretation.

HOME RULE FOR AMERICAN CITIES

The people of an incorporated city should have the right to handle their own affairs under a constitutional grant of power from the State. Home rule would permit cities to amend their own charters by action of the local electors, to choose the activities they wish to perform, and to raise their revenue as they see fit. They should be free to choose their own form of government, not merely to operate a government given them by the State. They should have the right to decide for themselves what services they require without asking State permission for each new undertaking. They should have authority to raise revenues from any local sources without being required to beg for funds to pay for the services they need. The municipalities should not be required to support State projects, pay for State services, or carry financial burdens imposed on them by the State.

The principle of municipal independence carries with it the obligation of cities to face their own problems, to meet their own responsibilities, to finance their own enterprises, within the limits of local resources, and consistent with practical economic and social factors.

Local government in the United States should be autonomous so far as practical and consistent with public welfare. While the Federal Government and governments of the several States may invoke their broad powers and greater financial resources to make possible some local government services, still these powers and finances should be delegated for the purpose of administration to the municipal authorities in a manner consistent with responsible local self-government.

The American Municipal Association believes in and will work for effective governmental and administrative organization and practices in municipalities, seeking to preserve the representative character of municipal government, and to assure the people a high standard of municipal service, to the end that the greatest public benefit may result from the use of public funds. While no municipality can have complete autonomy, the cities should have the maximum local authority consistent with their position as constituent elements in a sovereign State.

CIVILIAN DEFENSE

The matter of an American Municipal Association civil-defense policy shall be referred to the board of trustees with the understanding:

1. That the executive director seek maximum participation in the development of the ultimate Federal policy to be recommended by the President;

2. That at the earliest appropriate time the executive director advise the leagues and member cities of AMA of the details of any such civil-defense program in sufficient time for the expressions of opinions received to be used by the board of trustees in formulating a policy to be presented to the Congress and in this connection the trustees are requested to take into account the report of the civil-defense technical committee of AMA; and

3. That the AMA civil-defense policy and the technical committee be continued in existence not only for the purpose of making representations with regard to specific proposals presented to the Congress and to the States but also for much more careful study of the type of local civil-defense organization which should be created in the light of Federal action.

PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

The delegates and representatives of the 9,500 municipalities of the American Municipal Association at this twenty-fifth annual conference, favor and desire the enactment of Federal legislation authorizing the assessment and collection of local property taxes on Federal property or requiring the payment of annual sums in lieu of full taxes to municipalities by the Federal Government.

The American Municipal Association will cooperate with other organizations and with the Federal Congress in formulating legislation that will remove the burdens from localities with tax-exempt properties.

Within each State the organization of municipalities is urged to organize vigorous municipal support of such Federal legislation.

FINANCE—HOW SHALL WE FINANCE MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT?

Municipal governments are entitled to sufficient revenue to finance the activities required of them by custom or by law. Where the local citizens demand a local service they must expect to pay for it. When a State imposes duties or standards of performance on a local government, the State should be responsible for providing the money necessary to carry out its mandates. Where social services require expenditures that cannot be financed appropriately from local revenues, then the State (or in some cases the Federal) Government must furnish the funds for equalization.

Within reasonable limits of their economic ability, and considering the funds withdrawn by State and Federal taxation, the municipalities should be permitted to raise as large a portion of their revenues as they can from locally imposed taxes.

The States cannot appropriately say that municipalities can solve their revenue problems alone if given the right to use a greater number of local revenue sources. Such a theory is not sound because the State may take for its own use some easily collected highly productive sources such as sales, income, and gasoline taxes, while requiring local governments to finance from inadequate sources the cost of city streets, traffic control, education, social services, and many others.

But the municipalities should be permitted to adopt a larger number of taxes for local use. Unless the State provides adequate revenue by other measures, municipalities which can administer them should be authorized to use as local taxes the payroll-income tax, local sales taxes, license taxes based on volume of business, cigarette and tobacco taxes, amusement or admissions taxes, hotel taxes, liquor taxes, utility taxes, and various service charges.

Simplicity and directness of the entire local, State, and Federal tax system should be considered when new local taxes are imposed. If a single new tax can equitably provide additional needed funds, it would be preferable to use one tax instead of many. A logical and orderly tax system will not evolve without some leadership and direction. As far as the cities are concerned, the State-local tax system should be carefully planned by joint State and local action. Otherwise confusion for the taxpayers and municipal officials is bound to follow the search for new revenues.

In addition to the elements adopted in the above statements, the representatives of the 9,500 municipalities in the American Municipal Association at the twenty-fifth annual conference adopted resolutions which also are elements of the national municipal policy.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, I also ask that the several resolutions adopted at the conference be included at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL MUNICIPAL POLICY

Resolved, That the convention endorse the democratic and representative procedure of ascertaining by means of open discussion and debate the will of the delegates on the various subjects appearing on the program, and that the final results of such discussion be adopted as a part of the national municipal program of the American Municipal Association, and that additional ways and means to insure further development and refinement of policy be used throughout the year.

CENSUS BUREAU RESEARCH

Whereas current Nation-wide statistics on the finances and employment of States and local governments are important for the planning and administration of city affairs; and the Government's Division of the United States Bureau of the Census is the only national source for such data; and the scope, timeliness, and analysis of such data have been substantially improved by the Bureau in recent years: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Muncipal Association commend the Secretary of Commerce for the work of the Bureau of the Census in reporting on public finances and employment and urge it to maintain and strengthen its compilation and reporting of such basic statistics.

FEDERAL ADMISSIONS TAX

Whereas it is increasingly recommended by tax authorities and study commissions that the Federal Government should reduce or eliminate those taxes which can be administered best by State and local governments; and

Whereas congressional committees, the Council of State Governments, and many State leagues of municipalities have suggested that admissions and amusement taxes, among others, should be specially considered for release for State and local government use; and

Whereas admissions and amusement taxes are peculiarly suited to municipal administration and justified as a municipal resource: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association recommend to Congress the elimination of the Federal excise taxes on admissions and amusements, and call upon State legislatures to make admission tax authority available to their municipalities.

SOCIAL SECURITY EXTENSION

Whereas the exclusion of local governmental employees from coverage under the old-age and survivors' insurance provisions of the Social Security Act is in a sense discriminatory against such employees; and

Whereas the continued lack of retirement provisions for a great many local governments is resulting in serious losses of personnel to private industry and other employments providing retirement and survivors' benefits; and

Whereas municipal officials and employees have repeatedly suggested, and the Advisory Council on Social Security of the Senate Committee on Finance in its report dated April 8, 1948, has recommended that the old-age and survivors' insurance provisions of the Social Security Act be extended to employees of local governments; and

Whereas municipal employees are clearly entitled to the protection offered by old-age and survivors' provisions of the Social Security Act to the same extent as other workers now covered by the said act: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be petitioned by the American Municipal Association to amend the Social Security Act to include municipal employees thereunder according to a plan of permissive coverage whereby such inclusion shall be at the option of the duly constituted legislative body of each municipality by individual compacts made by the Federal Government direct with each municipality, that such permissive form of extension shall apply uniformly to all employees of a municipality regardless of their duties or occupational classification, whether such employees are performing services of a governmental or proprietary nature; that such extension shall include only the old-age and survivors' insurance provisions of the Social Security Act, and that supplementation of these provisions by local pension or retirement funds or systems shall not be prohibited nor precluded by any such amendment of the Social Security Act.

MUNICIPAL AIRPORTS ADMINISTRATION

Be it resolved by the American Municipal Association in convention assembled:

Whereas the development of aviation in the United States has been greatly fostered and encouraged by the municipally owned and operated airports of the various cities of the country; and

Whereas the Federal Airport Act of 1946 was designed to furnish financial Federal assistance to cities for airport purposes that they might effectively promote and expand aviation facilities to cooperate with the Federal Government in establishment of a Federal airport plan; and

Whereas the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics, entirely on his own initiative and without any mandate from Congress, has sought to withhold Federal funds from municipalities unless municipalities would agree to various objectionable restrictions on the handling of aviation gasoline and oil; and

Whereas the operation of the economic and business administration of a municipally owned airport is a local responsibility and should not be determined arbitrarily by a Federal agency: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association in convention assembled most vigorously protest against any restrictions on the handling of aviation gasoline and oil at municipally owned airports imposed by the Civil Aeronautics Administration and we do respectfully request that all reference to aviation gasoline and oil be removed from the standard Civil Aeronautics grant agreement form; and be it further

Resolved, That the executive director of the American Municipal Association be directed to furnish a copy of this resolution to the Administrator of Civil Aeronautics.

PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES ON PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS

Whereas the Federal Government has modified its system of payments in lieu of taxes on certain housing projects where such payments were in excess of the amounts originally specified in the contracts between the various housing authorities and the Federal Government; and

Whereas later agreements between such housing authorities and the Federal Government have provided for payments in lieu of taxes more economically sound than those authorized in the original contracts; and

Whereas cities are unnecessarily embarrassed by being unable to secure the benefits of the larger sums which the housing authorities are able to pay in lieu of taxes: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association record its opposition to the Federal policy recently invoked which prevents municipalities from receiving increased payments in lieu of taxes; further

Resolved, That this organization support legislation and administrative measures which will permit the payment of the increased amount in lieu of taxes under prevailing contracts.

FWA APPROVAL OF LOCAL PLANS

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association request Congress for the amendment of applicable Federal statutes so as to provide for an extension of the time limit within which plans, specifications, and working drawings may be submitted for approval to the Federal Works Agency, to the end that municipalities and other local government units may receive the remainder of interest-free loans from the Government as provided under their respective contracts.

AIR-TRAFFIC CONTROL

Whereas the Federal Government is primarily responsible for air safety and has operated air-traffic-control towers on many municipal and other public airports throughout the country by annual appropriations to the Civil Aeronautics Administration; and

Whereas municipal airport operators generally wish the Federal Government to continue to operate such control towers in the interests of safety and economy: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association urge the Congress of the United States to continue appropriations to the Civil Aeronautics Administration for the operation of air-traffic-control towers.

SLUM CLEARANCE

Resolved, That the Congress be urged to enact a complete and workable program developed in cooperation with the individual municipality which will provide for the removal of all substandard temporary warhousing units and the rehousing of the occupants in permanent standard housing, employing for this purpose, along with other moneys, the net profit already received from rentals of such temporary war housing.

FIRE PROTECTION

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association offer its cooperation to the International City Managers' Association in a study of the methods, procedures, or services by which municipalities may obtain a disinterested appraisal and grading of their fire-protection facilities, and the relation of such facilities to fire-insurance rates.

TITLE TO TIDELANDS

Whereas the title to lands lying beneath tidal and navigable waters has been resolved against the States and political subdivisions thereof by the Supreme Court decision in the case of United States against California; and

Whereas this decision has created multiple conflicts of opinion as to the validity of the title to these lands in the States and their several grantees; and

Whereas Federal legislative action appears to be sole remedy which States and cities have to secure title to these tidelands upon which billions of dollars have been expended by such State and local governments: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association urge the Congress of the United States, during its next session, to adopt legislation to correct the injustices which would follow from the Supreme Court's decision and restore to the States and their municipalities their property rights and titles in accordance with the law of property established by the Supreme Court of the United States in a long line of decisions handed down throughout 100 years, to the effect that the States and their grantees hold complete title and ownership to all lands lying beneath tidewaters and navigable waters within their respective boundaries; and that this organization lend its cooperation and full support to securing the enactment of such legislation.

CIVIL DEFENSE

Whereas the National Government proposes to call upon the cities to organize for civil defense; and

Whereas the report of the War Department Civil Defense Board makes the obvious point that in case of war the personnel of fire, police, and other emergency services of cities must be augmented rather than depleted; and

Whereas the uncontrolled and uncoordinated recruitment of municipal personnel by the various branches and units of the armed services, if made effective in time of war, would destroy the capacity of municipal government to function to protect life and property; and

Whereas these absolute contradictions in national policy must be reconciled and eliminated without delay: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association respectfully requests and urges the President of the United States and the Secretary of National Defense to take cognizance of this critical situation and to adopt and enforce policies relating to the recruitment of municipal personnel which will preserve the capacity of municipal government to protect its citizens and to discharge its national obligations for civil defense in case of national emergency.

SHARING HIGHWAY USER TAXES WITH MUNICIPALITIES

Whereas local municipal streets carry variously in the several States from 20 percent to 50 percent of total automobile traffic and, therefore, earn 20 percent to 50 percent of State and Federal highway user taxes; and

Whereas local municipal streets receive inadequate or no shares of such highway user taxes in many States; and

Whereas highway user taxes collected by State and Federal governments are now expended in substantial amounts to give this Nation good State highways and rural roads, although municipalities are still required to finance local streets primarily from property taxes, other general revenues, and borrowed funds: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the American Municipal Association endorse the principle that reasonable shares of highway user taxes be used for local streets on the basis of use.

REPORT OF IMMIGRATION SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee during the Eightieth Congress, I have received a progress report from the Immigration Subcommittee. This subcommittee was headed by the former junior Senator from West Virginia, Mr. Revercomb. The progress report will, I believe, be very helpful to Members of Congress in their review of the controversial and complicated immigration and displaced persons' problems. All of us, I am sure, are seeking the answer to the immigration and displaced persons problem—a problem with grave humanitarian aspects, and one which we want careful consideration given from the standpoint of discharging our obligation to the foreign peoples and from the standpoint of national security. I, therefore, send to the desk, a copy of this progress report and ask that it be appropriately numbered and printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNIFICATION OF ARMED FORCES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I reintroduce at this time my bill for unification of the armed forces in fact rather than in name only, which is the present status of our legislation.

I wish to say only this in regard to this bill, which I consider of vital importance to the security of this country, that I think it will save a minimum of $3,000,000,000 a year to the taxpayers of the country.

The bill (S. 108) to amend the National Security Act of 1947 to provide for a single executive department for the operation and administration of the Army, the Navy, and the Air Force; and to give the Secretary of Defense adequate power to enable him to formulate and place in operation integrated programs for the national security, introduced by Mr. MORSE, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

INCOME REPORTS BY GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Mr. MORSE. I introduce a bill requiring Government officials to report the amount and the sources of their income, as a matter of public record.

The bill (S. 109) to require certain members of the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of the Government to file statements relating to amount and sources of income, and dealings in securities and commodities, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

UNIVERSAL MILITARY SERVICE

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, the American Legion has gone on record in favor of universal military service. They have prepared a bill for the information of the committee and the Congress, which I have been requested to introduce, and I herewith present it.

At the same time, inasmuch as the 70-group air force bill was considered by the Committee on Armed Services of each House, and passed one House, on behalf of myself and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] I am introducing it again for the attention of the Armed Services Committee.

The bill (S. 66) to provide for the national security of the Nation by requiring that all qualified young men undergo a period of training, introduced by Mr. TYDINGS (for himself and Mr. MALONE), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

MINIMUM-WAGE STANDARDS

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to raise the minimum wage from 40 cents to 75 cents an hour, and I request that a statement in connection with the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 58) to raise the minimum-wage standards of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, introduced by Mr. MYERS, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The statement presented by Mr. MYERS was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MR. MYERS

Senator FRANCIS J. MYERS, Democrat, of Pennsylvania, said today he will have ready for introduction in the Eighty-first Congress at its opening session Monday a bill to raise the minimum wage from 40 cents to 75 cents an hour.

MYERS, who has been a cosponsor of various administration bills during the last 4 years to expand the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act as well as to raise the minimum wage, said his own bill will be restricted entirely to the wage-raising provision.

"There is no controversy over the need to increase the minimum wage for work done in interstate commerce from the present obsolete, starvation level of $16 for a 40-hour week," he declared. "Most of the Republican leaders of Congress have gone on record at one time or another, as has Governor Dewey, in favor of an increase.

"There is, however, considerable controversy over proposed changes in other sections of the Fair Labor Standards Act having to do with coverage, overtime, and so on. I strongly believe that we must not hold off on the enactment of legislation increasing the minimum wage to a realistic level until all of the many other issues involved in the Fair Labor Standards Act are settled in an omnibus bill.

"An increase in the minimum wage is an immediate, urgent necessity. While we are seeking to fight inflation with effective means, we must not forget that millions of Americans have already been impoverished by inflation and need the protection of a better minimum wage.

"This bill can be enacted into law almost immediately because the only controversy surrounding it has to do with the amount of the increase. President Truman and the Democratic platform are committed to a minimum wage of at least 75 cents. I think most members of the majority party in Congress agree with that platform promise. Many Republicans also concede 75 cents to be a reasonable figure. The bill, as I see it, can be disposed of promptly. After we have passed this bill, the Labor Committees of the House and Senate can then take up the fundamental issues involving other phases of the Fair Labor Standards Act and can consider them separately from the matter of minimum wage, which is of an emergency nature."

MYERS introduced a similar bill, S. 1288, in 1947, providing for a 65-cent minimum on the day that President Truman signed into law the Portal-to-Portal Act. The President at that time had urged a 65-cent minimum wage be adopted immediately. However, no action was taken on this or any other minimum wage bill by the Labor Committee of either House in the Eightieth Congress.

At the time the portal bill was before the Senate, on March 21, 1947, the Pennsylvania senior Senator introduced an amendment to it to increase the minimum to 60 cents, a figure he said then was so noncontroversial that he thought it would be accepted without discussion. However, on motion of Senator TAFT, the Myers amendment was tabled. Although Senator TAFT promised that the Senate Labor Committee would promptly get to work on a minimum wage bill, that was the last opportunity which either the Senate or the House had in the Eightieth Congress to vote on an increase in the minimum wage.

MYERS' 75-cent minimum would become operative 60 days after its enactment.

ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGES

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to provide for additional circuit and district judges. I request that a statement showing the justification for this legislation, together with the full text of the bill, be printed at this point in the RECORD for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement and the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 52) to authorize the appointment of additional circuit and district judges, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The statement and bill are as follows:

BILL FOR THE CREATION OF ADDITIONAL CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT JUDGESHIPS

(Statement by Senator PAT McCARRAN)

The judicial conference of the United States, consisting of the Chief Justice of the United States as chairman, and the chief judges of the 11 judicial circuits, at its last regular meeting held in September 1948, recommended that the Congress provide for a number of additional circuit and district judgeships in specified circuits and districts. In the report of the meeting of the conference issued by the Chief Justice it is said that the recommendations "contemplated the absolute minimum increase in judgeships necessary to adequately man the courts, and to provide for the continued efficient and orderly processing of the business of the courts." The report instructed the Director of the Administrative Office of the United States Courts "to present these recommendations to the Congress and to inform it that the prompt enactment of legislation necessary to achieve the objectives sought thereby was, in the view of the conference, a matter of extreme urgency and importance to the judiciary."

I have today introduced a bill to carry out the recommendations of the judicial conference.

The legislation, if enacted, will provide for two additional circuit judgeships for the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit, one additional circuit judgeship for the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit, and one additional circuit judgeship for each of the Courts of Appeals for the Seventh and Tenth Circuits. It will provide for four additional district judgeships for the southern district of New York, two for the eastern district of Pennsylvania, two for the western district of Pennsylvania, one for the district of New Jersey, and one for the northern district of Georgia. It will provide for a district judgeship for the northern and southern districts of Florida, and an additional district judgeship for the southern district of Texas, with a proviso that the official residence of one of the judges shall be in the southern half of the district. It will make permanent the present district judgeship for the eastern and western districts of Missouri, held by Judge Richard M. Duncan. It will provide for two additional district judgeships for the northern district of California, and one additional district judgeship for each of the districts of southern California, Oregon, and Kansas.

This legislation is necessary in order to relieve an insufficiency in the number of Federal judicial personnel both in the district courts and in the courts of appeals which has become increasingly evident in recent months. Although this is most serious in the circuits and districts to which the legislation relates, it is due in part to tendencies in the business of the Federal courts which are of rather general application. Most important is the fact that the types of cases calling for the greatest amount of time on the part of the judges for their disposition have been increasing in recent years.

Criminal cases in the Federal courts are about at the level that they were in the fiscal year 1940, the first year of the administrative office, in fact slightly below. The number of criminal cases filed in the fiscal year 1948 was 33,300, compared with 33,401 in the fiscal year 1940. All the Federal courts recognize an obligation to give priority in disposition to criminal cases, and this is done. But criminal cases as a class do not make a large demand proportionately upon the time of the judges because the great majority of criminal cases are ended by a plea of guilty, and less than 1 defendant in 10 is tried. The business that is creating congestion in the Federal courts is in general certain types of civil cases, to a large extent private civil cases.

The total number of civil cases filed in the district courts went down from 1947 to 1948 as a result of a sharp decline in cases of price regulation. These cases, however, took relatively a small amount of time of the judges. While they were going down, the other types of civil cases making greater exactions upon the judges were going up. The number of civil cases, exclusive of price regulation cases, filed in 1948 was 43,156, which was 8,000 above the corresponding number filed annually in the years before the recent world war, 1938 to 1941. The annual average of private civil cases filed in the 84 districts in the States (exclusive of the District of Columbia) having purely Federal jurisdiction, in the years 1947–48 was 20,266, compared with an average of 15,149 for the years 1938 to 1941, an increase of 33.8 percent. Mr. Shafroth, Chief of the Division of Procedural Studies and Statistics, stated in his annual report for 1948 that "a comparison of the present work of the district courts with the prewar volume shows that total civil actions commenced annually, excluding Government price-control cases, are now running one-fifth more in number than before the war and private cases one-third more."

It is cases in these classes that place the greatest burden upon the judges. Eleven judges who kept time records for a 3 months' period during the fall and winter of 1947 reported that 73.8 percent of their time spent on all civil cases in court and chambers was devoted to hearing and deciding private civil cases. The comments of district judges virtually without exception, confirm the fact that it is the contested civil cases and cases usually between private parties which take the heaviest toll of their time. Among the commoner types of this nature are cases under the Federal Employers Liability Act which were 10 times as numerous in 1948 as they were in 1941, cases under the Jones Act on account of injuries to seamen which were well above the 1941 level, and contract and tort actions brought in the Federal courts on account of diversity of citizenship in numbers nearly twice the 1941 level. Moreover in 1948, 1,503 cases were filed in the district courts under the Federal Tort Claims Act of 1946 which brought an entirely new class of cases within the jurisdiction of the district courts.

This increase in the time-consuming types of civil cases brought in the Federal courts since the prewar years, amounting as stated anywhere from a fifth to a third or more, has not been matched by anything like a corresponding increase in the judicial personnel. No new judicial district has been created in 20 years since 1928 when the State of Indiana was divided into two districts. The judicial conference at the same meeting at which it recommended the increases in circuit and district judgeships which have been specified, expressed its opinion that the creation of new districts was not the advisable way to solve the problem, and said that where it was found that additional judicial service was necessary it would recommend that such service be provided for by the creation of additional judgeships within the existing judicial districts. But from January 1, 1940, to June 30, 1948, the number of district judgeships provided for by the Congress increased only 10, from 189 to 199, or approximately 5 percent.

The district judges in 1948 increased their rate of disposition of private civil cases, terminating 26,417 such cases as compared with 23,091 in 1947. But with the lessened proportionate judicial power they could not keep pace with the increased volume of such litigation. The number of such cases pending rose during the year and congestion developed and increased. There is no way to meet this except by recognizing the condition and increasing the judicial power.

The number of private civil cases pending at the end of the fiscal year 1948, 29,899, was nearly 4,000 more than the number at the beginning, 25,973, and 9,000 more than the number 8 years earlier, June 30, 1940, which was 20,240. Inevitably the time required for the disposition of civil cases in the United States district courts has begun to rise. The median time elapsing from filing to disposition of civil cases disposed of after trial in the 84 district courts of the districts in the States (exclusive of the District of Columbia) during the fiscal year 1948 was 9.9 months, compared with 9 months in 1947, an increase of 10 percent. Earnest efforts are being made by the judges through use of the most efficient methods, including pretrial procedure and the assignment of judges to points of strain both within and beyond their circuits, to dispatch the business as promptly as possible. But there can be no question that more judges are needed, and unless they are provided congestion and delay will be bound to increase to the detriment of the litigants and the public.

The need for additional judges does not exist in all circuits and districts, although in nearly all, including jurisdictions which have heretofore been free from strain, the increased volume of private civil cases is putting a heavier burden upon the Federal courts than in previous years. There is less scope for the practice of temporarily assigning judges to areas of congestion outside of their circuits, because more and more judges who formerly responded to calls for help of this nature, are finding all or more than they can do to keep up with the work in their own courts. The increased burden of litigation became manifest first in the district courts, but it is now appearing in the courts of appeals, and will do so more and more as cases tried in the district courts reach the courts of appeals for review. The recommendations for additional judges, circuit and district, by the Judicial Conference were based upon a consideration by the members of the conference of the conditions within their individual circuits, and as stated in the report of its action, represent the minimum which in its judgment will enable the work of the courts to be carried forward effectively.

Salient facts in reference to the recommendations for the different circuits and districts are as follows:

CIRCUIT JUDGESHIPS

The District of Columbia circuit

The bill provides for an increase in the number of circuit judges of the court of appeals for this circuit from 6 to 8.

The number of cases filed in this court increased from 264 in 1947 to 348 in 1948. Because of its location in the Capital of the Nation, the court receives many more cases involving Federal administrative agencies and high Government officers than the courts of appeals of other circuits. The pending case load per judge at the end of the fiscal year 1948, 45, compared with an average for all circuits of 28 and was the highest in the country. The median time from the filing of the record to the final disposition of cases terminated after hearing or submission in the court during the fiscal year 1948 was 8.7 months, compared with an average for the country of 6.3 months.

Chief Judge Stephens of the court estimated shortly prior to the beginning of the present court year in the fall of 1948, that after allowance was made for cases which would be disposed of without argument or opinion, there would be a remainder of 370 cases to be disposed of during the current year by opinion after argument. If this could be done it would require each of the six present judges to write some 62 opinions during the year which compares with an average of 27 opinions per year written by the judges of the court during the past nine fiscal years. The addition of two judges will still require a high average output.

The third circuit

The bill provides for an increase in the number of circuit judges of the court of appeals for this circuit from 6 to 7.

The number of cases pending in this court per judge at the end of the fiscal year 1948 was 39, which next to the District of Columbia was the highest of any circuit. Judge Albert B. Maris is counted in the number of judges in this computation, although he is the presiding judge of the United States Emergency Court of Appeals, and his duties on that court require most of his time. By the Housing and Rent Act of 1948 jurisdiction was given to the Emergency Court of Appeals to review the recommendations of local advisory boards in defense-rental areas in reference to the maximum rents of classes of housing accommodations if requested by the Housing Expediter. There seems reason to think that the volume of work under this provision will be considerable. In order to save the Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit from falling behind, the proposal for an additional judge of that court is made.

The seventh circuit

The bill provides for an increase in the number of circuit judges of the court of appeals for this circuit from five to six.

The seventh circuit, which includes the States of Illinois, Indiana, and Wisconsin, has a population which, according to the census of 1940, was approximately 14,460,000. Although it includes the city of Chicago, which is the second largest city in the country and a center of large-scale industry and commerce, the court of appeals for the circuit has fewer judges than that of any other circuit except the first, fourth, and tenth. It has been recognized for some years that on account of the complexity of the cases coming before it the court needed six judges. The number of pending cases in the court at the end of the fiscal year 1948 averaged 37 per judge, in comparison with an average of all circuits of 28.

The tenth circuit

The bill provides for an increase in the number of circuit judges of the court of appeals for this circuit from four to five.

The recommendation of an increase in the number of circuit judges in the tenth circuit results from a marked increase in the number of cases filed in the court of appeals for that circuit recently. The number in the fiscal year 1948 was 194 compared with 159 in the previous year. This trend has continued into the current year. The number of cases filed in the first 5 months ended November 30, 96, was almost equal to the number filed in the first 6 months of last year, 98. The pending case load on November 30 this year, 132 (which is the latest information available) compares with 99 at the end of the second quarter of the last fiscal year on December 31, 1947.

DISTRICT JUDGESHIPS

The northern district of California

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges for this district from five to seven.

The work of the court for the northern district of California and other districts bordering the Pacific Ocean cannot fail to be affected by the marked increase in the population and business of that area, in the decade since 1940 now approaching a close. It is estimated that the population of each of the States of California, Oregon, and Washington, has increased somewhere between 40 and 50 percent since the last census. The private civil cases filed in the northern district of California were 537 in the fiscal year 1948 compared with 302 in the fiscal year 1940, and 279 in the fiscal year 1941 which was the last full year before the war began to have its effect. The number of private civil cases pending in the court rose from 234 at the end of the fiscal year 1946 to 488 at the end of 1947, and 608 at the end of 1948. The average number of trials per judge in 1948 was 61.4 in comparison with an average for the 84 districts of 42.1. The average number of civil trials per judge was 45.2 compared with an average for the 84 districts of 30.1. For some time the resident judicial personnel of the district court for this district has been insufficient. Effort has been made to compensate in part by the assignment of outside judges, but the additional permanent judgeships which the judicial conference has recommended are the only way of meeting the situation satisfactorily.

The southern district of California

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges for this district from eight to nine.

The increase in population and business in the Pacific Slope States in the last decade has had an important effect upon the work of the district court for the southern district. There has been a marked increase in the population of San Diego County which, in 1947 it was estimated, had risen from 289,000 in 1940, to 460,000. There is need for the court to spend more and more time at its headquarters in San Diego. The number of private civil cases pending before the court, 406, at the end of 1948 compares with 234 at the end of 1946, an increase of nearly 200 in 2 years. The State court system recently took account of the increasing volume of work for the courts in this part of California by increasing the number of superior court judges for Los Angeles County from 51 to 58 and the number of municipal court judges in Los Angeles from 41 to 51. The Federal court has an extraordinarily high criminal case load which in 1948 was an average of 423 per judge, compared with 167 for the 84 districts, and 153 only 6 years before. This is due in considerable part to the immigration cases that arise on the border with Mexico. While as stated these cases do not make so great a demand upon the judges per case as civil cases, and particularly private civil cases, yet the unusual volume of such cases in the southern district makes it a factor of some consequence in the burden upon the court.

The average number of trials per judge in the southern district of California in 1948 was 54, as compared with an average in the 84 districts of 42.1, and the average number of civil trials, 41.6, compared with an average of 30.1 in the 84 districts. Judge McCormick, the chief judge of the district court, is a judge of long experience, and he is emphatic in his judgment that the court cannot function satisfactorily without additional judge power.

The bill provides for the creation of a district judgeship for the northern and southern districts of Florida.

The action recommended will only restore the number of district judgeships for the two districts in the State of Florida, namely 5, which existed until October 1, 1947, when Judge Dozier A. DeVane, who was then a judge for the northern and southern districts, became a judge for the northern district in consequence of the retirement of Judge Augustine V. Long, of that district. The statute providing for a judge for the two districts then lapsed according to its terms. There can be no question that the judgeship for the two districts should be restored. All the reasons which existed for providing for the judgeship when it was created in 1940 now exist in accentuated form.

There has been a marked increase in the population of the southern district in recent years, and the business of the court for that district has grown. The private civil cases filed in the district per judge have risen from 91 in 1946 to 129 in 1947, and 212 in 1948, compared with an average for the 84 districts in 1948 of 117, and an average for the southern district of Florida in 1942 of 76. The southern district is in great need of reinforcement which is being met as far as it can be by the assignment of judges from other jurisdictions. But the amount of help of this nature which can be given is comparatively small. There is urgent need for the appointment again of a judge for the two districts who, as in the case of Judge DeVane, would give most of his attention to the southern district.

The northern district of Georgia

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges for this district from one to two.

This action as in the case of Florida would only restore the active judge power which existed until recently. A statute enacted in 1940 authorized two district judges for the district but provided that the next ensuing vacancy should not be filled. The second judgeship consequently lapsed upon the retirement of Judge E. Marvin Underwood on March 5, 1948, and at the present time there is only one active judge.

Unquestionably two active judges are needed. At the end of 1948 the number of pending private civil cases was 137 compared with 105 in the fiscal year 1941, the last full year before the war. Retired Judge Underwood recognizing the need has given an unusual amount of service to the court since his retirement, but there is a manifest limit to the help which can be fairly asked from him. When it is remembered that the city of Atlanta with its active population and industry is in the district, it would seem that there could be no doubt that the second active judgeship which the district formerly had, should be restored.

The district of Kansas

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges from one to two.

The provision recommended in reference to this district will also only restore the status which recently existed. A law passed in 1945 increased the number of judges from one to two. From the appointment of the present judge, Arthur J. Mellott, who took the oath of office on November 27, 1945, until the death on July 5, 1946, of Judge Guy T. Helvering, who, during that time, was the senior judge, the district had two judges. But the law which provided for the second judgeship prohibited the filling of the vacancy resulting from the death of Judge Helvering, and since that time, as before 1945, Kansas has had only one judge.

The population of Kansas, according to the 1940 census, was approximately 1,800,000. Except for one other State, Colorado, which, according to the 1940 census, had a population of around 1,100,000, Kansas is the only State in the Union with a population of 850,000 or more which does not have two or more district judges. The district of Nebraska, which adjoins it on the north, with a population in 1940 of around 1,300,000, has two judges.

The work of the district court for the district of Kansas imperatively calls for an additional judge. The load of private civil cases for the one judge in 1948 was 156, compared with a national average of 117 per judge, and 113 in the fiscal year 1942. Almost constantly district judges from other districts in the tenth circuit are being assigned by Chief Judge Phillips to the district of Kansas to help the resident judge. But the condition plainly calls for the creation of a second permanent judgeship.

The eastern and western districts of Missouri

The bill provides for making permanent the second district judgeship of the two districts presently held by District Judge Richard M. Duncan.

This judgeship was created by an act approved December 24, 1942. But it contained a proviso that the first vacancy occurring should not be filled. The purpose of the legislation recommended is to avoid the lapse of time which otherwise will occur if there is a vacancy in the judgeship before a statute can be enacted to continue it, and to assure the permanence of the position.

The judges of the court have arranged that Judge Duncan will make his headquarters in Kansas City and devote his attention to the western district and that Judge Roy W. Harper, who holds an interim appointment to the permanent judgeship for the two districts. will make his headquarters in St. Louis and give his attention to the business of the eastern district. Presumably, this division of duties between the two judges for the eastern and western districts will continue indefinitely. Consequently, it is the business of the western district which has the principal bearing on the recommendation to make permanent the judgeship held by Judge Duncan.

The experience since the passage of the act of 1942 above referred to shows plainly that three judges will be continuously needed in the western district. The volume of business in that district is approximately at the level at which it was when the law was passed. The number of private civil cases filed in 1948 and pending at the end of the year which, as has been said are the most important categories from the standpoint of the load upon the judge, is greater than in the fiscal year 1942. The number of such cases filed in 1948 was 314, compared with 292 in 1942, and the number pending at the end of 1948 was 238, compared with 136 at the end of 1942. Consequently, every reason which existed for creating the temporary judgeship held by Judge Duncan now exists for making it permanent, and it is desirable that this be done in order to avoid any hiatus in the position in the future.

The district of New Jersey

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges from five to six.

As pointed out hereinbefore private civil cases are the most time consuming. At the close of the fiscal year 1948 there were pending in the District of New Jersey 866 private civil cases, a number slightly in excess of 173 per judge, while pending private civil cases in the 84 districts of the United States averaged but 131 per judge. It should be noted also that the number of pending private civil cases has risen from 572 in the year 1940 to 866 in the year 1948 and there has been a continuous increase since the end of the war.

The situation is further complicated by the fact that there have been constant vacancies in the court by reason of death or resignation, and the District Court of the District of New Jersey has been badly in arrears in the disposition of cases for more than a decade. It should be noted in this connection that while the median time interval from filing to disposition in the 84 districts in 1948 was 9.9 months, the similar time interval in the district of New Jersey was 20.1 months.

There have been frequent assignments of additional judges to the district of New Jersey both from within and without the circuit, but for the prompt and effective disposition of the business of the district it is necessary that there be created at least one additonal judgeship.

The recommendation of an additional district judgeship for the district of New Jersey has been made by the judicial conference each year for the last 5 years.

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges from 12 to 16.

Of the four additional district judgeships recommended, one, if created, will merely restore the position that lapsed under the terms of the statute when the late Judge John M. Woolsey retired on December 31, 1943. His retirement reduced the number of resident judges from 13 to 12 where it has since stood. Since that time the number of civil cases filed in the court has all but doubled, rising from 2,949 in the fiscal year 1943 to 5,896 in the fiscal year 1948. The number of private civil cases filed, which was 1,977 in 1943, was 4,302 in 1948, and the number of such cases pending at the end of the year, which was 2,474 in 1943, was 6,738 in 1948. The court with its present force of 12 resident judges is burdened with an intolerable load which their utmost exertions and the help of many outside judges who are assigned to the district, are insufficient to carry. As an example, the number of private civil cases per judge filed in the court in 1948 was 359, compared with an average for the 84 districts of 117.

Under these conditions, the number of pending private civil cases has necessarily risen sharply in the last 3 years, going from 2,820 in 1946 to 4,706 in 1947, and 6,738 in 1948. The median time elapsing from filing to disposition of civil cases in which a trial was held in the court in the fiscal year 1948, was 22.5 months, which was the highest in the country, compared with a median for the 84 districts of 9.9 months. The present condition entailing unavoidable delay is plainly unjust to litigants besides being wearing to the last degree upon the judges of the court. The four additional judgeships which are recommended will give the court no more than a moderate judicial force to handle the cases coming before it which not only are numerous, but because of the concentration of commerce and business in New York, include an unusual proportion of complex and difficult problems for decision.

The district of Oregon

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges from two to three.

The work of the court for the district of Oregon is affected by the increase in population and business of the Pacific Coast States to which reference has been made in connection with the districts of California. The valley of the Willamette River, in which Portland lies near its confluence with the Columbia River, became a center for shipbuilding and other large-scale industry during the war, and this activity is continuing. In recent years the number of civil cases filed in the district has increased from 320 in 1945 to 370 in 1946, 474 in 1947, and 482 in 1948. The increase in 1948 over the number a few years previously was not due to price regulation cases because only five such civil cases were filed. The number of private civil cases begun increased from 92 in 1945 to 111 in 1946, 172 in 1947, and 174 in 1948, and the number of such cases pending rose from 62 in 1945 to 72 in 1946, 127 in 1947, and 140 in 1948.

The court for the district of Oregon is known as a court in which pretrial procedure is regularly and vigorously used. Both of the judges are recognized as highly capable jurists and skilled in dispatching work. The increase in the number of private civil cases pending under these conditions shows that the judge power has become insufficient, and that the additional judgeship recommended by the judicial conference is needed.

The eastern district of Pennsylvania

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges from five to seven. It should be pointed out that Judge Frederick V. Follmer, who was appointed as a district judge-at-large over the three districts of Pennsylvania, adds in effect the equivalent of a one-third judgeship.

At the end of the fiscal year 1948 there were pending in the eastern district of Pennsylvania 1,514 private civil cases which, as stated hereinbefore, constitute the most time-consuming group, or an average of 284 per judge. This is to be contrasted with the corresponding figure for the 84 districts of 131 private civil cases to a judge.

To put it bluntly the eastern district of Pennsylvania is overwhelmed in judicial business despite the fact that there have been continuous assignments of additional judges to that district both from within and without the circuit. These assignments have been both by the Chief Justice of the United States and by the chief judge of the circuit, and while they have been of substantial assistance it has been impossible to dispose of the heavy case load by such means.

The median time interval from issue to trial of civil cases terminated after trial in the 84 districts of the United States in 1948 was 5.8 months, whereas the similar time interval in the eastern district of Pennsylvania was 10.3 months, or almost 100 percent longer.

It should be noted that there has been a steady increase in the number of private civil cases (with the exception of the war years) filed in the district. In 1941 there were 454 private civil cases filed, whereas in the year 1948 there were 1,087 like cases filed. This amounted to 204 per judge as contrasted with 117 per judge in the 84 districts of the United States. It should also be observed that whereas there were but 538 private civil cases pending in the district at the end of the year 1941, there were pending 1,514 private civil cases at the end of the year 1948, an increase of almost 200 percent.

Unless prompt aid is given to the eastern district of Pennsylvania by the creation of at least two new judgeships there will follow a substantial failure of justice in that district due to inevitable delays.

The western district of Pennsylvania

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges from three to five, with a proviso that the first two vacancies occurring on the court should not be filled. It should be pointed out that Judge Frederick V. Follmer, who was appointed as a district judge-at-large over the three districts of Pennsylvania, adds in effect the equivalent of a one-third judgeship.

Though the case load in the court is not unusual, two of the present judges, including the chief judge, are of advanced years and have not been in continuous good health.

The condition of this district must be considered in conjunction with that of the eastern district of Pennsylvania, since Judge Follmer, the judge-at-large over the three districts, is compelled to spend a very great portion of his time at Philadelphia, the pressing necessity of additional judge power in the latter district being overwhelming.

The southern district of Texas

The bill provides for an increase in the number of district judges from two to three, with a proviso that the official residence of one district judge shall be in the southern half of the district.

The southern district of Texas is another area in which there has been a marked increase in population and industry during and after the war. The number of civil cases begun in 1948 was 1,111, compared with 508 in 1942, or more than double. The number of private civil cases begun in 1948 was 576, compared with 301 in 1942. The number of all civil cases pending at the end of 1948 was 1,030, compared with 277 at the end of 1942, and the number of private civil cases pending at the end of 1948 was 408, compared with 143 at the end of 1942. The case load per judge of private civil cases filed in 1948 was 288, compared with the average for the 84 districts of 117. The load per judge for this district in 1942 was 151.

The criminal case load, because of cases arising on the border, is proportionately very high, and while, as stated, it is the private civil cases which, per case, require the largest amount of time on the part of the judges, still, criminal cases in the volume in which they arise in this district add to the burden. The load is increased by the very large area of the district and the long distance which it is necessary for judges to travel between the seats of the court. The conditions obviously call for the additional judgeship which the Judicial Conference has recommended.

The proviso that the official residence of one of the judges shall be in the southern half of the district, was approved by the conference in compliance with what the conference was informed was the general sentiment of the district, and was deemed by the conference to be equitable.

REPEAL OF TAX ON OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to repeal Federal antimargarine legislation.

In the light of developments at the last session and since Congress went home, I am hopeful that repeal of the burdensome and unfair antimargarine laws will be one of the first orders of business of the Eighty-first Congress. In my opinion, only the legislative jam which developed during the closing days of the Eightieth Congress prevented complete repeal during that session.

As will be recalled, the House approved a repeal bill by a more than 2 to 1 vote; the Senate Finance Committee reported the House bill by a 12 to 0 vote. Test votes near the close of the session indicated that a bill to repeal the antimargarine laws would pass the Senate with votes to spare.

The issues in the margarine controversy are thoroughly known. Committee hearings were held in the House and Senate last session and the matter was thoroughly debated in both Houses. I see no reason for committee hearings at this session and feel that a vote should come as quickly as possible.

Since the session ended, the butter interests have come forward with the proposal that the taxes on margarine be lifted but that yellow margarine be banned by law altogether.

This simply represents an attempt to confuse the issue. The butter interests offered no concession whatever until it became apparent they could no longer resist the drive toward repeal of the unfair and outmoded legislation.

The butter lobby claims that the ban on yellow margarine is necessary to prevent margarine from being sold as butter.

A similar argument can be made in the case of hundreds of products which imitate and compete with an original product. If we accept butter's theory, we must prevent imitation leather from being colored brown. Otherwise, somebody might be deceived. The whole field of imitation jewelry is in danger for these imitate in color and in other ways the characteristics of the genuine gems. Furthermore, there are instances on record where these imitation gems have been sold as the real article. In the food field, we might have to color shortening some hue other than white, for fear that otherwise it imitates lard too closely. These examples could be continued at length.

Some of the illustrations I have given may sound ridiculous but when examined closely they are no more ridiculous than butter's assertion that it has a right to prevent a competitor from using a certain color.

Butter apparently is the only product in this country which claims a monopoly on any color. And, paradoxically enough, butter uses artificial coloring freely and, by law, butter is specifically exempted from the requirement that the use of artificial coloring must be stated on the label. If color is used in margarine that fact must be stated and the requirement applies to all other foods—with the exception of dairy products.

Butter has the yellow hue traditionally associated with the food only during some of the spring and summer months. In the winter, when the cows are no longer feeding on green grass, butter's color is likely to be white, and artificial coloring is used to make it yellow.

It is readily apparent that the proposal to ban yellow margarine cannot be defended from a logical standpoint. It clearly is an attempt by one commodity to cripple a competitor through punitive legislation.

No one, least of all myself, wants to see margarine sold as butter. There are laws against such sales now, both Federal and State. If these are not sufficient, let others be passed.

In this connection, an amendment was added to the oleomargarine tax repeal bill last year, when it was reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee which made the serving of margarine as butter in public eating places a Federal offense.

The amendment is substantially acceptable to me and I have included similar provisions in the bill I am introducing today. It provides that—

First. Each separate serving of margarine sold by a public eating place must bear labeling identifying it as oleomargarine; and Second. A public eating place serving colored oleomargarine must place a prominent and conspicuous notice in the establishment stating that oleomargarine is served there, or notice be printed on the menu. These requirements apply regardless of whether the margarine served is transported in interstate commerce or whether it is sold in the same State or Territory in which it is produced.

In my opinion, a ban on yellow margarine actually would do much less toward the elimination of fraud in the sale of margarine than my amendment proposes.

Approximately 90 percent of all margarine sold is sold through stores for home consumption. Under the food and drug laws margarine must be clearly identified, and there is little danger of fraud in store sales for these reasons: Not only are the majority of the grocers honest and conscientious men but the penalty for removing the wrapping from margarine and selling it as butter is very severe. A grocer who deliberately does so may be sent to prison for 3 years or fined $10,000, or both. No grocer in his right mind would risk such a punishment for the comparatively small amount to be made from fraud in the sale of margarine.

We have then the fact that there is no danger of fraud in the case of 90 percent of the margarine sold. The remaining 10 percent goes mostly to the bakers, who do not care whether margarine is yellow or white. They use it to mix with other ingredients. There is no possible danger of fraud in the case of sales to bakers.

Thus, we have a situation where solely in the case of public eating places, there is a possibility of fraud. This possibility, as I have shown, exists in substantially less than 10 percent of margarine sales. Yet the butter interests want to force housewives all over the country to continue extra and unnecessary work in mixing color into margarine and to waste food in the process.

If the butter interests want to prevent fraud, let them support repeal with an amendment which makes the sale of margarine as butter in public eating places a Federal offense and which places enforcement of the amendment in the very efficient hands of the Food and Drug Administration.

There is more at stake in the repeal of antimargarine legislation than is readily apparent. The law is in reality an internal tariff. If the precedent it establishes is followed, this country would be Balkanized.

Antimargarine legislation discriminates not only against consumers but against cotton and soybean farmers and other farmers who produce fats and oils which go into margarine. This discrimination has been going on a long time and has been particularly costly to the cotton producers.

Nor will repeal injure the dairy farmers, for butter today is the least profitable use of milk. Over the years it has become steadily less and less important to dairying.

The bill (S. 117) to repeal the tax on oleomargarine, to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act so as to complete the requirements for the positive identification of yellow oleomargarine, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. FULBRIGHT, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

SCHOOL-FACILITIES AID BILL

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a school-facilities aid bill.

One of the most acute problems facing our Nation today is that of providing adequate public-school facilities. Our population is increasing more rapidly than was anticipated and this, together with wartime restrictions upon construction, has resulted in an accumulated need for school buildings estimated last year by the United States Office of Education at $6,600,000,000.

The States and local school districts, faced with the related problems of providing more teachers with increased pay to compensate for higher living costs, are having great difficulty in financing building programs that are regarded as essential. This is a field in which Federal assistance is justified.

I am, therefore, reintroducing today the bill (S. 2909) which I offered at the special session of the Eightieth Congress last summer to provide $300,000,000 in grants and an additional $300,000,000 in loans for public school buildings and related facilities. This money would be distributed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to State educational authorities on a basis proportional to each State's population of school age as compared with the national population in the same age bracket. The plan proposed by my bill is similar to that under which the PWA helped to finance 15,300 new school buildings or major additions providing accommodations for 2,384,000 students.

I feel that this approach not only offers Federal aid to education at a point of great need, but it also gives maximum assurance to those who would like to see aid provided but who fear ultimate interference of the Federal Government with our educational system. My bill sets up no new agency and gives no added authority to an existing agency, except for the simple provision that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may act as disbursing agent. State educational authorities are left with full power to use the funds allocated to them in whatever way will best meet their individual building needs. No additional appropriations will be required to enable the RFC to finance this undertaking.

The bill (S. 137) to authorize the making of grants and loans to the States to assist in providing adequate public elementary and secondary school facilities, introduced by Mr. ROBERTSON, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

NATIONAL HOUSING OBJECTIVE

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, on behalf of Mr. WAGNER, Mr. MAYBANK, Mr. SPARKMAN, Mr. MYERS, Mr. HILL, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. LONG, and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to establish a national housing objective, and so forth.

I ask unanimous consent that there may be printed in the RECORD a short synopsis and explanation of the bill, together with another document showing the major differences between the bill I am sending to the desk and Senate bill 866 which was considered by the Senate during the Eightieth Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the synopsis and explanation of the bill presented by the Senator from Louisiana, will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 138) to establish a national housing objective and the policy to be followed in the attainment thereof, to provide Federal aid to assist slum-clearance projects and low-rent public-housing projects initiated by local agencies, to provide for financial assistance by the Secretary of Agriculture for farm housing, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

The synopsis and explanation of the bill, presented by Mr. ELLENDER, are as follows:

MAJOR DIFFERENCES BETWEEN THE BILL TO ESTABLISH A NATIONAL HOUSING OBJECTIVE AND THE POLICY TO BE FOLLOWED IN THE ATTAINMENT THEREOF, TO PROVIDE FEDERAL AID TO ASSIST SLUM-CLEARANCE PROJECTS AND LOW-RENT PUBLIC-HOUSING PROJECTS INITIATED BY LOCAL AGENCIES, TO PROVIDE FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BY THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE FOR FARM HOUSING, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES, AND THE COMPARABLE TITLES OF S. 866, EIGHTIETH CONGRESS, AS PASSED BY THE SENATE

TITLE

There has been included in the title of the draft bill a specific reference to the provision of financial assistance by the Secretary of Agriculture for farm housing.

Section 2. Declaration of national housing policy

The declaration of policy has been clarified by the addition of specific provisions with respect to governmental assistance for farm housing, and by the inclusion of provisions to make it clear that the portion of the policy relating to governmental assistance to localities for slum clearance and low-rent public housing is concerned with nonfarm families. A clause has also been added to the effect that appropriate local public bodies shall be encouraged and assisted to undertake positive programs of assisting housing cost reductions and increased efficiency in residential construction.

TITLE I—SLUM CLEARANCE

The maximum maturity of the long-term definitive Federal loans has been reduced from 45 years to 40 years. This is contained in the second sentence of section 102 (a) of the bill.

Provisions have also been included to authorize the Administrator to make loans to local public agencies for surveys and plans in preparation of projects which may be assisted under this title, and to permit contracts for such loans to be made upon the condition that such loans shall be repaid, with interest at not less than the applicable going Federal rate, out of any moneys which become available to such agency for the undertaking of the project or projects involved. These provisions are contained in section 102 (b) of the bill.

The total loan authorization has been reduced from $1,010,000,000 to an even $1,000,000,000, and the maximum period over which such authorization becomes available has been reduced from 6 years to 5 years. The rate at which the loan authorization becomes available has been changed as follows: $25,000,000 (in lieu of $10,000,000) in the first year (July 1, 1949), $225,000,000 (in lieu of $200,000,000) in the second year (July 1, 1950), and $250,000,000 (in lieu of $200,000,000 in each of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth years) in each of the third, fourth, and fifth years, respectively (July 1, 1951, July 1, 1952, and July 1, 1953). Provisions have also been included to permit the increases in the loan authorization becoming available in any year to be increased (subject to the total loan authorization of $1,000,000,000), at any time or times, by not to exceed an additional $250,000,000 upon a determination by the President that such action is in the public interest. Provisions have also been included which make the issuance of obligations by the Administrator for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury under the loan authorization subject to the approval of the President. These provisions are contained in section 102 (c) of the bill.

The capital grant authorization remains at $500,000,000, becoming available at the rate of $100,000,000 each year over a 5-year period, and provision has been included to make the availability of these contract authorizations subject to the approval of the President. Provisions have also been included to permit the rate at which such authorization becomes available to be accelerated. Thus, the bill provides that (subject to the total capital grant authorization of $500,000,000) the initial $100,000,000, and each subsequent annual increase therein, may be increased, at any time or times, by an additional $100,000,000 upon a determination by the President that such action is in the public interest. These provisions are included in section 103 (b) of the bill.

The provision that capital grant contracts shall contain a condition that no funds shall be disbursed by local public agencies for the purchase of land in connection with projects assisted under this title prior to July 1, 1950, is retained, but provisions have been added to direct the Administrator to waive such condition upon a determination by the President that the disbursement of funds by such agencies for such purpose prior to such date would be in the public interest. These provisions are contained in section 103 (b) of the bill.

The provisions prohibiting the demolition of residential structures prior to July 1, 1951, except upon a finding that such demolition would not result in undue hardship for the occupants of such structures have been changed so that such action is prohibited unless the governing body of the locality finds that such demolition would not reasonably be expected to cause undue housing hardship in the community. These provisions are contained in the proviso of section 105 (c) of the bill.

The former provisions with respect to the preparation of budget programs and the maintenance of accounts in accord with the Government Corporation Control Act, "as amended as of the date of the enactment of this act" have been changed by deletion of the words "as amended as of the date of this act." These provisions are contained in sections 106 (a) (1) and (2) of the bill.

The provisions with respect to an annual report have been changed to require such report to be submitted as soon as practicable following the close of the year for which it is made, rather than a specific requirement that such report must be on a fiscal-year basis, with transmission not later than January 15 following the close of the fiscal year for which it is made. These provisions are contained in section 106 (a) (4) of the bill.

Provisions have been included to make it clear that the competitive bidding and other restrictive statutes with respect to the acquisition, handling, or disposal of real property by the United States are not applicable to any real property which may be acquired by the Administrator pursuant to this title. These provisions are included in section 106 (c) (2) of the bill.

Provisions have been added to specifically exclude from the local grants-in-aid in connection with a project or projects assisted under this title (1) land in streets, alleys, and other public rights-of-way which may be vacated in connection with the project; and (2) any demolition or removal work, improvement, or facility for which a State, municipality, or other public body has received, or has contracted to receive, any grant or subsidy from the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, for such work, or the construction of such improvement or facility. These provisions are included in section 110 (d) of the bill.

TITLE II—LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

Throughout the revised bill the provisions applicable to the extended program are made to apply to projects initiated after March 1, 1949, instead of after July 1, 1948. A definition of the term "initiated" is also added in subsection 207 (b).

Section 201 now provides that no contract for financial assistance may be entered into unless the governing body of the locality involved has first entered into an agreement with the local public housing agency to provide the required local cooperation. This is in lieu of the provisions which merely required prior approval by the governing body of the provision of the low-rent housing. The gap of 20 percent between the lowest rents in available private housing and the top rents in a new low-rent public housing project must be established before a contract for contributions can be entered into, instead of prior to the time when a preliminary loan contract is entered into.

Section 201 in defining the requirements for eligibility of families as tenants of a law-rent housing project has been revised to include families which, at the time of their admission, actually are or are about to be without housing as a result of a court order of eviction due to causes other than the fault of the tenant.

The requirement that the question of greatest need be given due consideration in selecting tenants, has been strengthened by providing that, among applicants eligible for occupancy in a dwelling at a given rent, preference be granted to the families having the most urgent housing need.

The provisions of S. 866 (subsections 601 (b) and 602 (c)) permitting the removal of overincome tenants notwithstanding the provisions of any other laws, and authorizing the Public Housing Administration to exclude pensions for service-connected disability or death in determining net income for the purpose of tenant eligibility, have been deleted since such provisions are now contained in other legislation heretofore enacted by the Congress.

The cost limits on dwelling facilities and equipment for low-rent housing projects contained in section 203 have been revised in the following particulars:

(a) The former differential between the cost limits for projects developed in cities or metropolitan districts having a population of 500,000 or over and for projects in smaller localities has been eliminated. Such differential is no longer realistic due to the increased uniformity in construction costs, including both labor and material, irrespective of city size.

(b) The former limitations of $1,250 and $1,500 per room have been increased to a uniform $1,750 per room because of the increase in building costs; for dwelling projects in Alaska, the cost limitation has been increased from $2,200 to $2,500 per room.

(c) The provisions of S. 866 which authorized, under certain conditions, an increase of $250 per room in the applicable cost limitations for construction and equipment for any project initiated on or before December 31, 1952 (formerly December 31, 1951) have been revised to permit an increase in such cost limits of $750 per room without limit as to time.

Subsection 204 (c) which changes the definition of the going Federal rate has been revised so as to tie this rate to the interest on bonds of the Federal Government having a maturity of 10 years or more instead of 20 years or more, and has been further revised so that if there are two or more such rates the highest instead of the lowest thereof shall be applicable.

In subsection 204 (e), the maximum annual contribution rate is increased by one-half of 1 percent of development cost to compensate for the withdrawal of Federal income-tax exemptions on the interest of the obligations of the local public housing agencies.

Subsection 204 (h) which formerly authorized the Public Housing Administration to have outstanding at any one time notes and other obligations in the amount of $800,000,000, has been revised to increase this amount to $1,500,000,000, in recognition of the increased size of the program and of the increased construction costs anticipated in the extended program.

Section 205, which formerly authorized the Public Housing Administration to enter into contracts for annual contributions for low-rent housing projects in the amount of not more than $32,000,000 on or after the first day of July 1948, which limits were increased by further amounts of $32,000,000 in the years 1949, 1950, 1951, and 1952, respectively, thus providing for an aggregate authorization of $160,000,000, has been amended in the following particulars:

(a) The aggregate amount of annual contributions which may be contracted for in connection with the extended program has been increased to $445,000,000 in recognition of the increased size of the program and of increased construction costs.

(b) The Public Housing Administration is authorized to enter into contracts for not more than an aggregate of $85,000,000 after July 1, 1949, which limit is increased by further amounts of $90,000,000 on July 1 in each of the years 1950 through and including 1953, respectively. Subject to the total authorization, the President may accelerate this schedule by increasing any of the amounts by not more than $90,000,000.

(c) Provisions have also been included to make the availability of these contract authorizations subject to the approval of the President.

The provisions of S. 866 limited the new program of low-rent housing to a total of 500,000 dwelling units. Under section 205 of the bill, the Public Housing Administration can authorize the commencement of the construction of not more than 150,000 dwelling units after July 1, 1949, which limit is increased by further amounts of 150,000 dwelling units on July 1 in each of the years 1950 through and including 1955. The President is given the authority (subject to the total limitation of 1,050,000 units) to accelerate such construction by increasing any of the amounts by 150,000 dwelling units if he determines that this is in the public interest.

A new subsection 205 (b) has been added, which requires that low-rent housing projects initiated after March 1, 1949, be exempt from all real and personal property taxes, but authorizes payments in lieu of taxes in an annual amount not in excess of 5 percent of shelter rents charged in such project. These provisions are in lieu of the present requirements of the act as to local contributions. The subsection also permits the revision of contracts for projects initiated prior to March 1, 1949, on similar terms. These provisions are necessary to clear up the matter of payments in lieu of taxes which has been brought into question by limitations in the Government Corporations Appropriation Acts for 1948 and 1949.

A new section 206 has been added to better meet the needs of large families. The present provisions of the act are modified so that there will be a larger spread between the incomes for eligibility of families with few children and for those with a relatively large number of children. In addition, for the purpose of continued occupancy only, the income of a secondary worker who is under 21 years of age may be excluded in whole or in part, but such income must be taken into account in fixing rents.

A new subsection 207 (a) has been added, which amends the declaration of purpose of the United States Housing Act by changing the words "rural or urban communities" to the words "urban and rural nonfarm areas." This is done in view of the fact that farm housing will not be a responsibility of PHA under the act.

TITLE III—HOUSING RESEARCH

Provision has been included to exempt the dissemination of the results of technical research and studies from the existing provisions of law prohibiting any agency from distributing through the mail, free of postage, reports and other documents, unless a request therefor has been previously received by such agency. This is contained in the last sentence of section 301 (a) of the bill.

Provision has been included in the subsection relating to the preparation by the Housing and Home Finance Administrator of periodic estimates of national housing needs and reports with respect to the progress being made toward meeting such needs to make it clear that such estimates and reports relate to urban and rural nonfarm housing. This is contained in section 301 (b) of the bill.

Provision has been included for the Administrator to consult with, and make recommendations to, other appropriate Federal agencies with respect to means for overcoming existing gaps in available housing data and facilities for the collection of such data. Provision has also been included to make it clear that the research and studies can be undertaken cooperatively with industry and labor, as well as with agencies of State and local governments, educational institutions, and other nonprofit organizations. These provisions are contained in section 302 of the bill.

TITLE IV—FARM HOUSING

The basis of the definition of the term "farm" for the purposes of this title has been changed from the production of one or more agricultural commodities for sale or home use of "a gross annual value of not less than $400" to "a gross annual value of not less than the value as determined by the Secretary to be equivalent to a gross annual value of $400 in 1944." This is contained in section 401 (b) of the bill.

Provision has been included for the preparation by the Secretary of Agriculture of periodic estimates of national farm housing needs and reports with respect to the progress being made toward meeting those needs. This is contained in section 405 (b) of the bill.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Provisions have been included to authorize the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to appoint such advisory committees as may be necessary in carrying out his functions, powers, and duties under this or any other act. Provision is also included that service as a member of any such advisory committee shall not constitute any form of service or employment within the provisions of title 18, section 198 or 203, United States Code, or within the provisions of title 41, section 119, United States Code. These provisions are contained in section 501 on the bill.

(Provisions of title 18, section 198, United States Code, prohibit an officer of the United States, or a person holding any place of trust or profit, or discharging any official function under or in connection with any executive department, and others from acting as agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States or assisting in the prosecution or supporting any such claim or receiving any gratuity or favor or interest in any claim, and provides a fine of not more than $5,000, 1 year's imprisonment, or both.)

(Provisions of title 18, section 203, United States Code, prohibit an officer or clerk of the United States directly or indirectly from receiving or agreeing to receive any compensation for any services rendered or to be rendered in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter in which the United States is a party before any court or bureau, and provides a fine of $10,000 and not more than 2 years' imprisonment.)

(Title 41, section 119, United States Code (which is part of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944), prohibits any person employed in any Government agency to prosecute or act as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States or for any person within 2 years after such employment to prosecute or act as counsel or agent involving any such matter directly connected with which such person was so employed to perform duties. It provides $10,000 fine or imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both.)

In recognition of the special security features which would attach to the definitive bonds issued by public-housing agencies, there has been included an amendment of the National Banking Act so that national banks, and (to the extent permitted by State laws) State member banks of the Federal Reserve System, would be authorized to purchase larger amounts, and to underwrite, local public-housing agency definitive bonds. Without this amendment, investment in such bonds by these banks would continue to be subject to the same restrictions as are applicable to local public-housing agency definitive bonds, which are now issued without these special security features. In other words, they could be purchased for the bank's own account only to the extent of 10 percent of unimpaired capital and surplus.

The amendment would also cover the short-term notes issued in connection with the slum-clearance program, and those issued in connection with the low-rent public-housing program, when secured by a pledge of proceeds of Federal loans in an amount sufficient to pay the principal of and the interest on such short-term notes at maturity.

The Secretary of Labor has been included in the membership of the National Housing Council in the Housing and Home Finance Agency. This provision is contained in section 503 of the bill.

A new section 504 has been included to repeal the provisos which were inserted in the Government Corporations Appropriation Acts of 1948 and 1949 limiting payments in lieu of taxes. These provisos necessitated violations by the Public Housing Administration of certain contracts which had been legally entered into. Their repeal will permit payments in lieu of taxes to be made in accordance with such valid contracts. These provisos are superseded by subsection 205 (b) which establishes a permanent policy as to payments in lieu of taxes. Subsection (c) of section 504 repeals a proviso limiting the number of employees of the Public Housing Administration above grades CAF–10 and P–3 to not exceeding 20 percent of the total number of administrative employees. This repeal is necessary to permit the recruitment of the trained personnel which will be necessary to put the new program into operation.

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY OF THE BILL TO ESTABLISH A NATIONAL HOUSING OBJECTIVE AND THE POLICY TO BE FOLLOWED IN THE ATTAINMENT THEREOF, TO PROVIDE FEDERAL AID TO ASSIST SLUM-CLEARANCE PROJECTS AND LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING PROJECTS INITIATED BY LOCAL AGENCIES, TO PROVIDE FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BY THE SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE FOR FARM HOUSING, AND FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Section 1. Short title

This section provides a short and convenient form of citation.

Section 2. Declaration of national housing policy

The purpose of this section is to set forth our national housing objectives as established by the Congress and the basic principles to be followed in attaining these objectives. In so doing it stresses the Nation's interest in housing production and related community development because of the basic contribution they can make both (1) toward improving the health and living standards of the people and (2) toward an economy of maximum employment, production, and purchasing power. Thus, the section calls attention specifically to the need for housing production and related community development sufficient to remedy the serious housing shortage, to eliminate slum and blighted areas, to realize as soon as feasible the goal of a decent home and a suitable living environment for every American family, to redevelop communities so as to advance the growth and wealth of the Nation, and to enable the housing industry to make its full contribution toward an economy of maximum employment, production, and purchasing power.

The keystone of the national housing policy established by the Congress in this section to facilitate the attainment of these objectives is that private enterprise shall be encouraged to serve as large a part of the total need as it can, and that governmental assistance shall be utilized where feasible to enable private enterprise to serve still more of the total need, and that local public bodies shall be encouraged and assisted to undertake positive programs of assisting housing cost reductions and increased efficiency in residential construction. As a complementary policy, the section states that governmental aid to clear slums and provide adequate housing for urban and rural nonfarm families whose incomes are so low that they are not being decently housed in new or existing housing shall be extended to those localities which estimate their own needs and demonstrate that these needs are not being met by reliance solely upon private enterprise, and without such aid, and that governmental assistance for decent, safe, and sanitary farm dwellings and related facilities shall be extended only where the farm owner demonstrates that he lacks sufficient resources to provide such housing on his own account and is unable to secure necessary credit for such housing from other sources on terms and conditions which he could reasonably be expected to fulfill.

TITLE I—SLUM CLEARANCE

General summary

This title provides for Federal aid to local communities for the clearance of their slums and blighted areas, so as to make such areas available for redevelopment, with the active participation of private enterprise. Two types of assistance are authorized:

1. Loans, both temporary and long-term (but not in excess of 40 years in the case of long-term definitive loans), where needed to finance necessary project costs, at an interest rate designed to return to the Government the cost to it of the funds it obtains to make the loans; and

2. A capital grant subsidy where necessary to enable the land in the slum or blighted area to be made available for redevelopment at prices consistent with proper and sound land use and planning.

The administration of the program would be under the jurisdiction of the Housing and Home Finance Administrator. In the administration of the program adherence to the following principles is required:

1. That any project assisted be related to the improvement of housing conditions in the locality.

2. That Federal assistance be confined to purposes of land assembly and preparation for redevelopment, as distinguished from actual redevelopment of the area.

3. That every project assisted be a local undertaking, locally planned, locally approved, and designed to serve local needs.

4. That plans for redevelopment afford maximum opportunity to, and require maximum reliance upon, private enterprise.

5. That there shall be local financial participation in an amount equal to at least one-third of the difference between the project cost and the new reuse value of the land comprising the project area.

6. That there be adequate provision for the rehousing of the families displaced by the clearance of the area.

Section 101. Local responsibility to aid housing cost reductions

This section provides that in extending financial assistance under this title, the Housing and Home Finance Administrator shall give consideration to the extent to which the locality has undertaken a positive program of encouraging housing cost reductions and efficiency in construction through the adoption and improvement of building and related codes.

Section 102. Loans

This section, together with section 103, sets forth the forms and extent of Federal financial assistance. Section 102 provides for assistance in the form of loans which (whether temporary or definitive) must bear interest at not less than the rate specified in the most recently issued bonds of the Federal Government having a maturity of 10 years or more at the date the contract for the loan is made. The long-term definitive loans must mature within a period not exceeding 40 years from the date of the bonds evidencing such loans.

While providing for Federal assistance in the form of loans where necessary, the section also contains provisions to facilitate financing by private capital. It contains a provision to enable the local public agency to obtain loan funds from sources other than the Federal Government to the fullest extent practicable, and to substitute such funds for borrowing from the Government.

The section also provides that the Administrator may make loans to local public agencies for surveys and plans in preparation of projects which may be assisted under this title, and that the contracts for such loans may be made upon the condition that such loans shall be repaid, with interest at not less than the applicable going Federal rate, out of any moneys which become available to such agency for the undertaking of the project or projects involved.

To provide the funds necessary to make the loans, the Administrator is authorized, with the approval of the President, to issue and have outstanding at any one time notes or other obligations for purchase by the Secretary of the Treasury aggregating not more than $1,000,000,000. This loan authorization becomes available over a 5-year period at the following rate: $25,000,000 on and after July 1, 1949, increased by $225,000,000 on and after July 1, 1950, and by $250,000,000 on and after July 1 in each of the years 1951, 1952, and 1953, respectively. The section also permits the increases in the loan authorization becoming available in any year to be increased (subject to the total loan authorization of $1,000,000,000), at any time or times, by not to exceed an additional $250,000,000 upon a determination by the President that such action is in the public interest.

Section 103. Capital grants

This section provides for Federal subsidy, in the form of capital grants, in those cases where such assistance is necessary, if the land in the project area is to be available for proper use and soundly planned redevelopment at prices consistent with such use and redevelopment. The capital grants would be limited in amount to two-thirds of the net cost of the projects assisted in the locality.

The Administrator is authorized to contract to make capital grants aggregating not more than $500,000,000. This capital-grant authorization becomes available over a 5-year period at the following rate: $100,000,000 on and after July 1 in each of the years 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952, and 1953, respectively. The section also permits the specified amounts of the capital-grant authorization becoming available in any year to be increased (subject to the total capital-grant authorization of $500,000,000), at any time or times, by not to exceed an additional $100,000,000 upon a determination by the President that such action is in the public interest.

While contracts for capital grants may be entered into beginning with July 1, 1949, the section contains a provision that such contracts shall contain a condition that no funds shall be disbursed by the local public agency prior to July 1, 1950, for the purchase of land in connection with a project assisted under this title. Such condition may be waived upon a determination by the President that the disbursement of funds for such purpose prior to such date would be in the public interest.

Section 104. Requirements for local grants-in-aid

This section requires the locality to share the cost of any project assisted under this title and to call upon the Federal Government for aid only to the extent necessary. It provides that the local community must itself participate financially to the extent of at least one-third of the net project cost. Such local financial participation may take the form of direct reduction of project costs or expenditures, by contributions made in cash or its equivalent, demolition or removal work, or site improvements in the project area, and public improvements and facilities (other than low-rent public housing) which are primarily of direct benefit to the project and which are necessary to serve or support the new uses of land in the project area.

Where a locality undertakes more than one project with Federal assistance, this requirement relates to such projects considered in the aggregate.

Section 105. Local determinations and responsibilities

This section assures that aid to projects under this title will be based upon local determination of need and maximum reliance upon private enterprise. It provides that any contracts for financial aid under the title may be made (1) only with a duly authorized local public agency, and (2) only if the redevelopment plan is approved by the governing body of the locality. Moreover, such approval must include findings that the Federal financial aid to be provided in the contract is necessary to enable the land in the project area to be redeveloped; that the redevelopment plans will afford maximum opportunity for development or redevelopment by private enterprise; and that the redevelopment plan conforms to a general plan for the development of the locality as a whole.

This section also assures that all projects assisted will (1) conform to the locally approved redevelopment plan, and (2) be consistent with the interests of the locality as a whole. It therefore provides that as a condition to Federal assistance, the local public agency must agree to obligate those to whom it sells or leases the land in the project area, to devote the land to the uses specified in the redevelopment plan and to begin the building of their improvements within a reasonable time.

The section also requires that there be a feasible method for both the temporary and permanent relocation of the families who have been living in the area and who are displaced as a result of the clearance of the area. Also, in view of the present acute housing shortage, this section would prevent the demolition of residential structures in connection with this program prior to July 1, 1951, unless the governing body of the locality determines that such demolition would not reasonably be expected to create undue housing hardship in the community.

Section 106. General provisions

This section gives the Administrator the technical powers necessary for the performance of his duties under this title. In so doing, it provides for the appointment of a director to administer the provisions of this title under the direction and supervision of the Housing and Home Finance Administrator.

Section 107. Payment for any land used for low-rent public housing

This section assures that the financial assistance under this title will not result in a double subsidy to federally assisted low-rent public housing, by providing that any land in the project area made available for such low-rent public housing must be paid for by the public-housing agency undertaking such low-rent public-housing project.

Section 108. Surplus Federal real property

This section authorizes the sale of any Federal real property surplus to the needs of the Government and within the area of a land-assembly project, to the local public agency undertaking the project, at a price equal to its cash value. The proceeds from any such sales would be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Section 109. Protection of labor standards

This section, designed for the protection of labor standards, requires that not less than prevailing wages be paid to those employed in the development of any land assembly and clearance project assisted, makes the "kickback" statute applicable to all such projects, and requires monthly reports by all contractors used on the project to the Secretary of Labor as to the number of persons employed by them, the aggregate amount of their pay rolls, the total man-hours worked, and expenditures for materials.

Section 110. Definitions

This section sets forth the definitions of the basic terms used in the title. Through these definitions, the section provides that no area selected for redevelopment would qualify for Federal aid unless it involves either the clearance of a slum area or the development or redevelopment for predominantly residential uses of a deteriorated or deteriorating area or a defunct subdivision or other open land whose development is necessary for sound community growth. Through these definitions also, the section limits Federal assistance to the furtherance of such purposes as (1) the acquisition of the land in the area requiring development or redevelopment; (2) the removal of existing structures; (3) the provision of the utilities essential for the new land uses contemplated; and (4) the making of the land available for development or redevelopment at prices consistent with its proposed new uses. Aid under this title to assist the construction of any of the buildings contemplated by the redevelopment plan is expressly barred.

Through these definitions, this section also provides that there may not be included in the local grants-in-aid (1) land in streets, alleys, and other public rights-of-way which may be vacated in connection with a project, or (2) any demolition or removal work, improvement or facility for which a State, municipality, or other public body has received or has contracted to receive from the United States, or any agency or instrumentality thereof, any grant or subsidy for such work or for the construction of such improvement or facility.

TITLE II—LOW-RENT PUBLIC HOUSING

This title provides for an extension of the low-rent public-housing program to serve urban and rural nonfarm families whose incomes are so low that they are not being adequately housed in new or existing private housing.

This title contains provisions to assure complete consistency with the basic objectives of primary reliance upon private enterprise to do as much of the total housing job as possible; increasing emphasis on local responsibility and initiative; special preferences to meet the needs of veterans of low income and their families; enlistment of private capital to finance substantially all of the capital cost of low-rent public housing projects; and an adaptation to current needs with respect to the amount and period of Federal annual subsidy to achieve low rents. The title also contains a miscellany of technical and perfecting amendments to the United States Housing Act of 1937 that the 11 years of operations under it have indicated to be necessary and desirable.

Section 201. Local responsibilities and determinations; tenancy only by low-income families

This section provides that no contract shall be made for any Federal financial assistance, even for preliminary loans, unless (1) the local public housing agency has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Public Housing Administration that there is need for such low-rent housing in that locality which is not being met by private enterprise, and (2) the governing body of the locality has entered into an agreement with the local public housing agency to provide the local cooperation and assistance which is required by the Public Housing Administration pursuant to this act.

This section also provides that no contract shall be made for annual contributions unless the local public housing agency has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Public Housing Administration that a gap of at least 20 percent has been left between the upper rental limits for admission to the proposed project and the lowest rents at which private enterprise is providing (through new construction and available existing structures) a substantial supply of decent, safe, and sanitary housing toward meeting the need of an adequate volume thereof. This section thus establishes as basic national policy that even with respect to the segment of housing need which private enterprise is not now serving, every opportunity is to be given to it to extend its servicing capacity downward in the income scale.

This section also provides that every contract for annual contributions shall require the local public housing agency to fix, subject to approval by the Public Housing Administration, maximum income limits for admission and for continued occupancy in the project; that, as indicated by actual investigation, every family admitted to the project was actually one of low income, and that every such family admitted came from an unsafe, insanitary, or overcrowded dwelling, or had been displaced by slum-clearance or land assembly and clearance projects, or was (without fault of its own) either without housing or was about to be without housing pursuant to a court order of eviction. For a period of 5 years, however, these requirements as to previous housing conditions do not apply to veterans or servicemen of low income. In the selection of tenants for low-rent housing, it is also required that there be no discrimination against families otherwise eligible on the ground that their incomes are derived in whole or in part from public assistance, and that (subject to the veterans' preference in sec. 206) families will be selected on the basis of the most urgent housing need. After admission, periodic examinations must be made of the incomes of all families which are tenants in the project so that, if their incomes increase to the point where they exceed the applicable income limits for continued occupancy they will be required to move from the project.

Section 202. Veterans' preference

This section guarantees preference to veterans and servicemen of low income in all new projects initiated under this title after March 1, 1949. Specifically, as between applicants who are eligible for a dwelling of given size and rent, it requires that preference be given to the families of veterans and servicemen (including families of deceased veterans and servicemen) who apply for admission within 5 years after March 1, 1949. First preference is to be given to disabled veterans whose disability is service-connected.

Section 203. Cost limits

This section is designed to end certain inequities and uncertainties resulting from present cost limits on low-rent housing assisted by the Federal Government, and to compensate for the drastic increase in building costs since the enactment of the United States Housing Act in 1937.

Experience has indicated that existing provisions, which place a ceiling on dwelling-unit costs as well as on room costs, and which provide for higher cost ceilings for cities of more than 500,000 population, are inadequate or faulty, in that (1) a limitation on cost of the entire dwelling unit hampers the provision of housing for larger-sized families of low income and so discriminates against such families; and (2) a differential in cost limits based solely on the size of the community is no longer realistic due to the increasing uniformity in construction costs, including both labor and material, irrespective of city size. The section, therefore, eliminates the limitation on dwelling-unit cost (but not the limitation on room cost, so that the essential limitation on construction costs is still retained in the act) and establishes a uniform ceiling, not dependent upon city size, for the cost of dwelling construction and equipment. In addition, the section simplifies determination of compliance with the cost limitations by specifically basing these limitations upon the cost of dwelling construction and equipment. This will ordinarily permit firm determination of compliance with the cost limitations of the act at the time the main construction contract is awarded.

In order that the drastic increase in building costs and the now apparent long-term nature of the housing shortage may not prevent the provision of housing needed for families of low income, the section provides for a higher cost limitation of $1,750 per room, as compared with existing limitations of $1,000 and $1,250 in small and large cities, respectively. It also authorizes an increase in this cost limitation by not more than $750 per room in areas where it would not be feasible without such an increase to construct the project without sacrifice of sound standards of construction, design, and livability, and where there is an acute need for such housing. The percentage of increase in the cost limitation as provided in this section is substantially less than the percentage of increase in construction costs which has actually occurred since 1937.

Because of special cost problems in Alaska, the section also has special provisions permitting higher costs in that Territory if found necessary.

The authorization increasing cost limits is applicable to any low-rent project completed after January 1, 1948. This will make the increased cost limitations available in the case of low-rent projects which were deferred during the war, on some of which a small amount of construction work was done before they were deferred. It will also make the increased cost limitations applicable to, and permit the revision of contracts for, any projects which have proceeded (prior to enactment of this bill) under the provisions of Public Law 301, Eightieth Congress.

Section 204. Private financing

The basic purpose of this section is to amend the financing provisions of the United States Housing Act of 1937 so as to make possible the permanent financing of substantially all of the capital cost of low-rent housing projects by the sale of bonds to private investors, and thus in effect limit Federal lending assistance for low-rent housing primarily to the temporary interim financing necessary prior to the issuance of definitive bonds.

Essentially, this section provides that, in the event of a substantial default by a local public-housing agency in its covenants to the Public Housing Administration, such local agency shall be obligated to convey the project to the PHA (subject to the right of the local public-housing agency to reconveyance upon a satisfactory curing of the default), and PHA would continue to make annual contributions for the project, but not in excess of the amounts contracted for pursuant to statute. This would assure both (1) that the project will continue to operate as a low-rent housing project, and (2) that investors who have furnished the capital funds for its construction in reliance upon the continuance of its low-rent character and the making of annual contributions therefor during the entire life of the loan, will have their investment adequately protected. With this assurance there is every reason to anticipate that private capital will be willing to furnish practically all of the capital cost through long-term loans and to do so at low interest rates.

Subsection (c) revises the provisions in the act relative to the going Federal rate (which determines the minimum loan interest rate and the maximum annual contribution rate) so as to provide that the governing rate is the one as of the date of Presidential approval of the contract for loan or annual contributions, respectively, rather than the date the contract happens to be signed by PHA and the local public-housing agency. Further, it provides that in the event there are two or more rates of interest on such date, the rate used shall be the highest thereof, and that in no event shall such rate be deemed to be less than 2½ percent.

Subsection (d) reduces the maximum loan period from 60 to 40 years in the case of projects initiated after March 1, 1949. It also reduces the minimum interest rate on Federal loans made for projects where the maximum loan and annual contribution period is 40 rather than 60 years, from the applicable going Federal rate plus one-half of 1 percent to simply the going Federal rate. Contracts for projects initiated prior to March 1, 1949, may thus be amended to reduce the loan and annual contribution period to not more than 40 years and thereby make the project eligible for an interest rate at simply the applicable going Federal rate.

Subsection (e) limits the period over which annual contributions may be paid on projects initiated after March 1, 1949, to 40 years as contrasted with the present authorization of 60 years. In order to make this possible, and thus substantially reduce the total amount of the annual contributions, and also to assure a highly marketable local housing agency bond even under adverse market conditions, this paragraph would, in respect to projects where the contribution period is limited to 40 years, amend the present requirement that the contribution shall not exceed a sum equal to the going Federal rate plus 1 percent upon the cost of the project so that the limitation would be a sum equal to the going Federal rate plus 2½ percent upon such cost. Contracts for projects initiated prior to March 1, 1949, may thus be amended to reduce the annual contribution period to not more than 40 years and thereby make the project eligible for annual contributions at the applicable going Federal rate plus 2½ percent. The shortening of the period over which contributions may be paid will more than compensate for these permitted increases in annual rate.

In addition to substantially reducing the need for Federal loan assistance, subsections (f) and (g) also revise certain conditions with respect to Federal subsidy assistance. This is done by providing: (1) that, instead of an adjustment in the maximum amount of annual contributions at 5-year intervals, in any year when the receipts derived in connection with the project exceed expenditures and charges, the excess must be used for purposes which will reduce subsequent annual contributions; and (2) that contracts for loan and annual contributions based on a certain going Federal rate may, in the case of a change in such rate, be amended so as to base the interest rate on Federal loans, or the maximum contribution payable, on the new rate whenever this would promote economy or be in the financial interest of the Federal Government.

Subsection (h) requires that borrowings by PHA be from the Treasury. At the same time, the statutory language with respect to PHA's borrowing authorization is adapted to the changes in PHA's lending program that would result from the provisions of this title, by relating the gross amount authorized to the amount of obligations that may be outsanding rather than to the aggregate amount that the PHA may issue exclusive of refunding obligations. The gross amount authorized is increased from $800,000,000 to $1,500,000,000 in recognition of the size of the extended program and the increased construction costs anticipated. It is expected that with this amendment the PHA borrowing power will make it possible to provide all of the capital funds required from the Federal Government in connection with the extension of the low-rent program.

Subsection (i) provides a definition of development cost (which is not defined in the present act) which will include in capital cost all items which would be capitalized under standard business practice, including the cost of capital improvements made at any time during the life of the project. This definition, in accordance with business practice, includes appropriate carrying charges, such as interest, insurance, payments in lieu of taxes, local housing authority overhead, and any initial operating deficit. Carrying charges subsequent to the date of physical completion, however, may not be capitalized.

Section 205. Annual contributions

Subsection 205 (a) increases the Public Housing Administration's annual contributions authorization in order to provide for an extension of the program of low-rent nonfarm public housing. It authorizes PHA, after July 1, 1949, to contract for annual contributions aggregating not more than $85,000,000 a year (in addition to the existing authorization), which limit would be increased by further amounts of $90,000,000 in each of the following 4 years. The new authorization thus totals $445,000,000 per annum. In order to avoid possible increases in the level of construction costs due to putting the whole program under construction at an early date, it is provided that PHA may authorize the construction of not more than 150,000 additional dwelling units after July 1, 1949, which limit would be increased by further amounts of 150,000 on July 1 in each of the years 1950 through and including 1955, respectively, thus making a total of 1,050,000 dwelling units in 7 years. The authorized schedules for entering into annual contributions contracts and for commencing construction may be accelerated by $90,000,000 additional in any year for contributions or 100,000 additional units in any year, by the President if he determines that such action would be in the public interest.

Under subsection 205 (b), contracts for annual contributions on projects initiated after March 1, 1949, shall require exemption of the projects from all real and personal property taxes, but the contracts may authorize payments in lieu of taxes not in excess of 5 percent of shelter rents. This requirement of tax exemption is in lieu of existing provisions in the act as to local contributions. Contracts on projects initiated prior to such date may also be amended to include similar provisions in respect to annual contributions payable after July 1, 1949; but if the contracts on such projects are not so amended, payments in lieu of taxes will hereafter be limited solely to the amounts provided under contracts outstanding on July 1, 1947. As to contributions payable between July 1, 1947, and July 1, 1949, any payments in lieu of taxes (unless already made in larger amounts) will be made in the amounts specified in contracts validly in effect on July 1, 1947.

Section 206. Special provisions for large families of low income

Experience has proven that the existing provisions of the United States Housing Act make it difficult to meet the needs of large families of low income. In addition to the provisions in section 203 revising the cost limitations so as to permit the construction of larger dwelling units, this section revises the requirements as to eligibility for families with a relatively large number of children. In lieu of the present provision which requires that income at the time of admission may not exceed five times the gross rent, or six times the gross rent for families with three or more minor dependents, this section provides that the 5 to 1 ratio shall be used for all families, but that, in determining family income for admission and continued occupancy an exemption of $100 shall be given for each minor member of the family (defined, for the purposes of this section, as a person of less than 21 years of age). Under this new provision, there will be a somewhat larger spread between the incomes for eligibility of families with few children and those with a relatively large number of children, in recognition of the very substantial differences in their respective living expenses.

A further difficulty has arisen in the case of families who are eligible to remain in a project on the basis of the income of the regular, principal worker or workers, but who become ineligible if a child goes to work upon the completion of his schooling. Even though this be a temporary condition which will end as soon as a child marries and establishes his own home, the family would nonetheless be required to move from the project. The present provisions thus tend to force children to leave the home in order to continue the family eligibility. This section therefore authorizes the exclusion of the earnings of such a secondary worker from family income in determining eligibility for continued occupancy, but not for original admission to a project. This exclusion will be only a temporary matter, since it is limited to secondary wage earners who are under 21 years of age. Moreover, the income of such children will not be excluded in determining the actual rent to be paid by the family.

Section 207. Technical amendments

Subsection 207 (a) amends the declaration of policy contained in section 1 of the act so as to limit the future low-rent public-housing program of the Public Housing Administration to urban and rural nonfarm areas. It is contemplated that no assistance to farm housing will be provided under this title of the act.

The other subsections of this section provide technical amendments to the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, which are required either as a result of the substantive amendments to the act provided in this bill or have been shown to be necessary as a result of experience under the bill.

TITLE III—HOUSING RESEARCH

The purpose of this title is to assist in progressively reducing housing costs and increasing the production of better housing, and in making available necessary data on housing needs, demand, and supply.

Section 301

This section authorizes the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to undertake a program with respect to technical research and related studies which will stimulate and promote progressive reductions in housing costs and the increased and sustained production of housing through new and improved techniques, materials, and methods, improvement and standardization of building codes, modular coordination, and the development of other sound methods and standards, and other necessary housing data which will help attain the objectives of this title and of the act.

The section also provides that the results of such technical research and studies shall be disseminated in such form as shall be most useful to industry and to the general public. It also exempts the dissemination of the results of such technical research and studies from the existing provisions of law prohibiting any agency from distributing through the mail, free of postage, reports and other documents unless a request therefor has been previously received by such agency.

The section further contemplates inventories to be made by the Administrator, as necessary, of urban and rural nonfarm-housing needs and the progress being made in meeting those needs, and authorizes the Administrator to encourage localities to make studies, surveys, and plans with respect to their own housing needs, markets, and development.

Section 302

This section stresses the intention of cooperative effort between the Housing and Home Finance Administrator with industry and labor and with other Federal and local governmental agencies, educational institutions, and other appropriate agencies in carrying out the research program. The section further provides that the Administrator shall consult with, and make recommendations to, the other appropriate Federal agencies with respect to such action as may be necessary and desirable to overcome existing gaps and deficiencies in available housing data and the facilities available for the collection of such data.

TITLE IV—FARM HOUSING

While assistance to families of low income in urban and rural nonfarm areas is authorized under the present provisions of the United States Housing Act of 1937, the special and different problems attaching to farm housing require special provisions for such housing. This title, in making these provisions, recognizes the intimate relationship between farm housing and the entire farm economy and so places the responsibility for aids to provide adequate housing on farms upon the Department of Agriculture.

Section 401. Assistance by the Secretary of Agriculture

This section authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to provide financial assistance to farm owners in the United States, and in Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and in the Virgin Islands, when necessary to enable them to provide decent farm dwellings and related facilities for themselves, their tenants, lessees, share croppers, or laborers. (For the purposes of the title, a farm is considered to mean a parcel or parcels of land operated as a single unit which is used for the production of one or more agricultural commodities and which customarily produces such commodities for sale and for home use of a gross annual value of not less than the values determined by the Secretary to be equivalent to a gross annual value of $400 in 1944.) Financial assistance under the title is explicitly limited to farm owners who are without sufficient resources to provide the necessary housing on their own account and who are unable to secure the credit necessary for such housing from other sources upon terms and conditions which they could reasonably be expected to fulfill.

Section 402. Loans for dwellings on adequate farms

This section provides for the assistance needed for those farmers lacking acceptable housing for themselves, tenants, share croppers, or laborers who cannot afford to improve the housing facilities on their farms if they are required to secure the needed credit assistance on the usual cooperative or private credit terms prevailing in the area, but who could do so on the basis of liberal credit terms. For farm owners in this group, the section authorizes loans for periods not in excess of 33 years, bearing interest at a rate not exceeding 4 percent per annum, and secured by the applicant's equity in the farm. In order further to assure the use of cooperative and other private credit sources to the fullest practicable extent, the section requires that the borrower shall refinance his loan through such credit sources whenever he should reasonably prove able to do so.

Section 403. Loans for dwellings on potentially adequate farms

This section provides for the assistance needed for those farmers whose present income is such that some assistance over and above the long-term, low-interest credit provided in section 402 is necessary in order to put them into a position to acquire and maintain acceptable housing and related facilities, but whose farm enterprise is capable of being redeveloped by improvement or enlargement of the farm, or by adjustment of farm practices or methods, so as to bring them within a reasonable period of time within the group of farmers in need only of liberal credit aids. With respect to such farmers, the section provides that if the applicant undertakes an adequate farm enlargement or improvement or adjusted-practices plan (either with or without special assistance from the Department of Agriculture) the loan assistance provided in section 402 may be supplemented by annual contributions during the temporary period of time (which may not exceed 10 years) that the redevelopment of the farm enterprise is being effected. These contributions would take the form of credits against the installment of principal and interest due for any annual installment period and would be limited to the sum, not greater than the annual installment of interest plus one-half of the annual installment of principal, by which the net income of the borrower is insufficient to make the full amortized annual payment.

Section 404. Other loans and grants for minor improvements to farm housing

This section provides for the assistance that may be given to those farmers who do not possess adequate family-type farms and for whom there are no apparent means of providing an adequate income by a process of farm enlargement or redevelopment within a 10-year period. In order to avoid the possible danger that by establishing permanent dwellings for farmers under these circumstances, the perpetuation of the present unsatisfactory situation (which would seem to require different approaches) would be encouraged, the section authorizes only special loans and grants for improvements such as roof repairs, toilet facilities, a sanitary water supply, and other facilities designed to protect the health of the farmers and to so improve their living conditions that their situation is not a threat to the public health. Such assistance is limited to $1,000 per family unit (not over $500 of which may take the form of a grant or contribution), and to $2,000 in the aggregate to any one individual.

Section 405. Technical services and research

In order to facilitate the provision of decent farm dwellings generally, this section authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to furnish, without charge (or at appropriate charge), to all persons technical services such as building plans, specifications, construction supervision and inspection, and advice and information regarding rural dwellings and other farm buildings. The section authorizes the Secretary and the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to cooperate in research and technical studies in the rural housing field and also authorizes the Secretary to utilize (through the Agricultural Extension Service) the facilities of State agencies and educational institutions in furnishing the services and information authorized by this section.

This section also authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to prepare and submit to the President and to the Congress estimates of national farm housing needs and reports with respect to the progress being made toward meeting such needs, and to correlate and recommend proposals for such executive action or legislation necessary or desirable for the furtherance of the national housing objective and policy established by this act with respect to farm housing, together with such other reports or information as may be required of the Administrator by the President or the Congress.

Section 406. Preference for veterans

This section requires that the Secretary of Agriculture give preference to veterans in administering the provisions of the title.

Section 407. Local public agencies and committees to assist Secretary

This section authorizes the use by the Secretary of Agriculture of local county or parish committees of farmers to examine applications of farmers desiring to obtain the benefits provided by the title and to submit recommendations in appropriate form to the Secretary with respect to each application.

This section further enables the Secretary to make the assistance authorized under sections 402 to 405, inclusive, available through the use of local public agencies authorized to assist in providing housing for families in rural areas.

Section 408. General powers of Secretary

This section vests in the Secretary the power to establish standards of adequate housing necessary for the purpose of operations of the title. It also authorizes him to require that any recipient of financial assistance agree that the housing provided with such assistance shall not be a justification for changing the terms of the lease or occupancy agreement with the occupants of such housing to the latter's disadvantage without the approval of the Secretary.

Section 409. Administrative provisions

This section provides the various administrative and related powers necessary in order that the Secretary of Agriculture may administer the program authorized in the preceding sections.

Section 410. Loan funds

This section provides that the Secretary of Agriculture is to obtain the funds to make loans under the title from the Treasury. Such borrowings are limited to the amounts necessary to make loans not in excess of $25,000,000 on or after July 1, 1949, and the additional sums of $50,000,000 on or after July 1, 1950, $75,000,000 on or after July 1, 1951, and $100,000,000 on or after July 1, 1952.

Section 411. Contributions

This section authorizes the Secretary on or after July 1, 1949, to make commitments for contributions pursuant to section 403 of not to exceed $500,000 per annum, and additional commitments aggregating $1,000,000 per annum on or after July 1, 1950, additional commitments aggregating $1,500,000 per annum on or after July 1, 1951, and additional commitments of $2,000,000 per annum on or after July 1, 1952.

Section 412. Authorization for appropriations

This section authorizes the appropriation of the amounts necessary to permit payments on obligations of the Secretary of Agriculture equivalent to the contributions he makes under section 403 and interest on such sum; to make grants under section 404 aggregating not more than $1,000,000 on and after July 1, 1949, and additional sums of $2,500,000, $4,000,000, and $5,000,000, on and after July 1 of each of the years 1950, 1951, and 1952; and for such other amounts as may be necessary for the carrying out of the provisions of the preceding sections of the title.

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

Section 501. Advisory committees

This section authorizes the Housing and Home Finance Administrator to appoint such advisory committees as may be necessary in carrying out his functions, powers, and duties under this or any other act.

The section also provides that service as a member of any such advisory committee shall not constitute any form of service or employment within the provisions of title 18, section 198 or 203, United States Code, or within the provisions of title 41, section 119, United States Code.

Title 18, section 198, United States Code, prohibits an officer of the United States or a person holding any place or trust or profit or discharging any official function under or in connection with any executive department from acting as agent or attorney for prosecuting any claim against the United States or assisting in the prosecution or supporting any such claim or receiving any gratuity or favor or interest in any claim, and provides a fine of not more than $5,000, 1 year's imprisonment, or both.

Title 18, section 203, United States Code, prohibits an officer or clerk of the United States directly or indirectly from receiving or agreeing to receive any compensation for any services rendered or to be rendered in relation to any proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter in which the United States is a party before any court or bureau, and provides a fine of $10,000 and not more than 2 years' imprisonment.

Title 41, section 119, United States Code (which is part of the Contract Settlement Act of 1944), prohibits any person employed in any Government agency prosecuting or acting as counsel, attorney, or agent for prosecuting any claim against the United States or for any person within 2 years after such employment to prosecute or act as counsel or agent involving any such matter directly connected with which such person was so employed to perform duties. It provides $10,000 fine or imprisonment or not more than 1 year, or both.

This section follows title III, section 303 (b), Public Law 253, Eightieth Congress—the National Security Act of 1947—except that this section of the bill provides a complete exception from title 41, section 119, United States Code, whereas the National Security Act provision grants exception from such provision unless the act of such individual is made unlawful when performed by such individual, with respect to any particular matter which directly involves the department or agency which such person is advising or in which such department or agency is directly interested. The provisions of this section of the bill necessarily must be broader so as not to bring a member of the advisory committee who is doing business with the Federal Housing Administration within the prohibition of that section.

Section 502. Amendment of National Banking Act

By reason of the provisions of the new section 22 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended (which new section is added by section 204 (b) of the bill), special security features would attach to definitive bonds issued by local public housing agencies in connection with the low-rent public-housing program. Special security features would also attach to short-term notes issued by local public agencies in connection with slum clearance projects, and by public housing agencies in connection with low-rent housing projects, when secured by a pledge of rights of any such agency under its loan contract with the Government.

In recognition of these security features, this section provides for an amendment of the National Banking Act so that national banks, and (to the extent permitted by State laws) State member banks of the Federal Reserve System, would be authorized to purchase larger amounts, and to underwrite, local public housing agency definitive bonds and, when adequately secured, short-term notes issued by local public agencies in connection with slum-clearance projects or by public housing agencies in connection with low-rent public housing projects. Without this amendment, investment in such obligations by these banks would continue to be subject to the same restrictions as are applicable to local public housing agency definitive bonds, which are now issued without these special security features. In other words, they could be purchased for the banks' own account only to the extent of 10 percent of unimpaired capital and surplus.

Section 503. National Housing Council

This section provides that the Secretary of Labor or his designee shall be included in the membership of the National Housing Council in the Housing and Home Finance Agency.

Section 504. Amendments of the Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1948, and the Government Corporations Appropriation Act, 1949

The Government Corporations Appropriation Acts for 1948 and for 1949 included provisos to the effect that no payments of annual contributions should be made which were occasioned by payments in lieu of taxes in excess of amounts originally contracted for. This reference to original contracts had the effect of prohibiting payments under revised contracts which had legally been entered into prior to July 1, 1947, the date on which the first of the appropriation-act restrictions was effective. These limitations on funds appropriated for annual contributions made it impossible for the Public Housing Administration, in a number of cases, to comply with contracts validly in existence. These provisos of the two appropriation acts are therefore repealed as of the beginning of the fiscal year for which they apply, in order that payments validly contracted for may be made. These provisos are superseded by subsection 205 (b) which establishes a permanent policy as to payments in lieu of taxes.

The Government Corporations Appropriation Act for 1949 also limits the number of employees of the Public Housing Administration above grades CAF–10 and P–3, to not exceeding 20 percent of the total number of administrative employees. Under the expanded program of low-rent public housing, a relatively greater number of trained technical employees will be required than were necessary under the former operations of the agency when low-rent public housing represented only a small portion of its total responsibilities. This section also repeals this 20-percent limitation in order to permit the recruitment of the trained personnel which will be necessary to put the new program into operation.

Section 505. Amendment of Internal Revenue Code

This section withdraws from the exemption from Federal income taxes (provided for by section 22 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code for interest upon obligations of a State, Territory, or any political subdivision thereof) interest upon—

1. Obligations issued by any local public agency in connection with a slum clearance project assisted under title I of the bill when such obligations are secured by a pledge of the rights of such agency under a loan contract, as provided for in section 102 (a) of the bill; and

2. Obligations issued by a public housing agency in connection with a low-rent public housing project assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, when such obligations are secured either (a) by a pledge of the rights of such agency under a loan contract entered into under section 9 of said United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended, or (b) by a pledge of annual contributions under an annual contributions contract between such public housing agency and the Public Housing Administration if such contract contains the covenant by the Public Housing Administration which is authorized by section 22 (b) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended.

Section 506. Act controlling

This section contains the standard provision providing that the provisions of this act shall control in the case of inconsistency with other legislation.

Section 507. Separability

This is the usual separability clause.

FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry. I shall make no further remarks regarding this measure except to point out that it is the same bill which was introduced by the same introducers in the last session, at which time it was Senate bill 984. I would further point out that it is being introduced by four Democrats and four Republicans. The approach is being made on an entirely bipartisan basis, and I pray and I hope that it will continue to be in that situation so long as this type of legislation is before the Senate.

The bill (S. 174) to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry, introduced by Mr. IVES (for himself, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. MORSE, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MYERS, Mr. SALTONSTALL, and Mr. SMITH of New Jersey), was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

BILLS RELATING TO INTERSTATE COMMERCE

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference three bills, and ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make a brief statement with respect to one of the bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, during the past 8 months businessmen engaged in interstate commerce have been greatly disturbed by the confused status of the law as to the payment, or absorption, of transportation charges. Last spring this body directed a subcommittee, of which I am now chairman, to study that problem. The testimony before that subcommittee shows that not only are businessmen confused, but that the members of the Federal Trade Commission and its staff are in complete disagreement as to when a seller may pay or absorb transportation costs.

The subcommittee has now heard 109 witnesses, including 4 of the men who buy everything the Government purchases. It is now time for the subcommittee to turn from its general study, to specific efforts to clarify the present chaos resulting from the Supreme Court interpretation of the law. This is not an administrative problem, it is not a political problem, and it is not a judicial problem. It is an economic problem which, in the best interests of our national economy, the Congress must decide. Whether we shall permit sellers acting in good faith to pay or absorb transportation costs to promote competition is a legislative problem.

Obviously, sellers conspiring to fix prices are not acting in good faith. I am certain all right-thinking men join me in urging the vigorous enforcement of the laws against conspiracies. The bill which I now introduce makes it clear that all such conspiracies are illegal and will in fact strengthen the powers of the Federal Trade Commission in dealing with them.

This bill is an attempt to eliminate confusion. I do not pretend that it is in perfected form, and constructive criticism is invited. Our subcommittee should like to hear the views of all interested parties on the effect of this bill, in order that we may ultimately report to the Senate the legislation most desirable to end the current chaos.

Mr. President, I have said that the members of the Federal Trade Commission and its staff are in complete disagreement as to when a seller may absorb transportation costs. I desire here and now to offer documentary proof that my very serious charge is correct.

On December 28, 1948, 3 days prior to his retirement from the Federal Trade Commission, the then Chairman of that Commission, Robert E. Freer, delivered a very carefully prepared speech before the City Club in Denver.

The Denver Post, commenting editorially on this speech, said, "Mr. Freer 'Bicycles' All Over the Ring," and followed that headline with the following devastating editorial:

Robert E. Freer, retiring Chairman of the Federal Trade Commission, accomplished a great deal on his visit to Denver to speak before the City Club.

For one thing he convinced many Denver businessmen that a man may be a Washington bureaucrat and a strong defender of free competition at the same time.

He spoke convincingly on the theme—which is too likely to be forgotten—that a free economy requires government police work to prevent monopoly from getting a throttlehold on competition. In other words, there can be no freedom, except for the thugs, if the policeman is fired.

But when it came to discussing the basing-point issue, Mr. Freer engaged in the same kind of shadow boxing which has marked the FTC's statements of its views ever since the United States Supreme Court decided the Cement case in a manner to throw a chill into businessmen, large and small, throughout the country.

Mr. Freer reiterated his former declarations that, in spite of the recent court cases, a company is not barred from the use of a basing-point price system, provided it is not engaging in illegal price conspiracy or discriminating unjustifiedly against some of its customers in favor of others.

Mr. Freer asked us to take his word for that statement. He didn't try to prove it. He ignored all the arguments which have been presented to show that a succession of cases has brought us to the point where the courts are ready to outlaw any use of the basing-point system, if they have not already done so.

He ignored the fact that at least one member of the FTC believes the basing-point system already has been made illegal, for all practical purposes. He avoided any mention of excerpts from court decisions which indicate no company using a basing-point system can be sure that fact will not be used against it in Federal court.

He didn't even mention that it has been the aim for years of certain FTC officials and the men who surround them to outlaw all price systems except the system of f. o. b. mill.

Mr. Freer would have us believe the alarm which has spread over the business community because of basing-point decisions has been inspired almost entirely by the steel and cement industries. His respect for the intelligence of independent businessmen in other lines cannot be great.

In his Denver address, Mr. Freer said, "Personally I believe in freight absorption to meet competition." That certainly is an admission that the basing-point system may be used for good purposes as well as bad.

If that is Mr. Freer's position, he is hardly on sound ground when he objects to any amendment to Federal law which would simply give businessmen the assurance that the use of a basing-point system would not by itself be held against them unless there also is evidence of price fixing or unjustified price discrimination.

How such an amendment might hamper the work of the FTC, Mr. Freer does not explain, but he is against it. He and the other Commissioners are doing a lot of fancy footwork and dodging but very little solid infighting.

In this speech Freer, the former Federal Trade Commission Chairman, said:

During all of the time that this uproar has been going on officials of the Federal Trade Commission have been stating that the law does not require uniform f. o. b. mill prices, that the law does not prevent the absorption of freight to meet competition, and that the recent decisions apply only to situations in which there is organized monopoly and conspiracy to suppress and restrain competition.

Furthermore, he has disclaimed repeatedly any intention by the Commission to force "everybody in the country to sell at f. o. b. mill prices." Yet when our Senate subcommittee chairman wrote the Federal Trade Commission asking it to suggest suitable witnesses for his committee, this very same Robert E. Freer, on behalf of the Commission, officially suggested that the committee call Dr. Vernon Mund, Dr. Frank A. Fetter, and Mr. Walter Wooden. Dr. Fetter publicly testified that he believed all sellers should be required to sell at f. o. b. mill prices, and if that is not now required by the law, the law should be amended to so provide. Dr. Mund testified to the same effect, and the Commission's legal expert, Mr. Wooden, testified:

Dr. Fetter believes that there ought to be uniform mill-net prices; * * * I am inclined to believe he advocates the uniform f. o. b. mill price * * * and I think I agree with his economics 100 percent.

In a speech in New York on December 7, 1948, the Commission's Chairman said:

I will further state, as strongly as I know how, that no businessman, acting in a genuinely competitive way, need fear that the decisions in either the Cement or Rigid Steel Conduit cases will be used as precedents for declaring his competitive conduct unlawful.

But the attorneys for the Commission gave contrary testimony before the Senate subcommittee. Attorney Paulson testified:

The avenues of competition are being unnecessarily narrowed by reason of the Commission's having proceeded against freight absorption on an individual basis. * * * It is now the law that the individual and separate practice or system of a company in absorbing all or part of the freight costs to distant customers to match lower prices of nearby competititors results in varying mill-net returns and is illegal.

The Federal Trade Commission Chairman said in his Denver speech that—

During all the time that this uproar has been going on officials of the Federal Trade Commission have been stating that the law does not require uniform f. o. b. mill prices, that the law does not prevent the absorption of freight to meet competition.

But Attorney Walter Wooden testified at the Senate public hearings that the only "absolutely safe" way for a seller to be sure that he was not violating the law was to sell at f. o. b. mill prices, and Commission Attorney Paulson testified:

My answer, in the light of the Conduit order, as I read it, would have to be that its practical effect is to require f. o. b. mill selling.

The former Federal Trade Commission Chairman, Mr. Freer, said in his recent Denver speech:

The recent decisions apply only to situations in which there is organized monopoly and conspiracy to suppress and restrain competition.

Yet on May 19, 1948, the Commission, with Freer as its Chairman, issued an official press release on one of those "recent decisions"—the Conduit case—which said:

Court holds basing-point method of pricing to be unfair irrespective of conspiracy.

In a speech at Dixville Notch, N. H., on September 18, 1948, Freer said:

Basing-point and delivered-price systems, as such, are under no special attack. The Commission has attacked those delivered price systems where they appeared to be the core of price-fixing conspiracies.

And in a speech in Washington on August 4, 1948, the Commission's chief economist, Dr. Edwards, said:

Basing-point systems as such are under no special attack.

But the Freer and Edwards statements that all basing-point systems are not illegal are contrary to the statements of Walter Wooden, their own senior associate counsel, who argued before the Supreme Court that the cement company's pricing methods, apart from combination and conspiracy, results in unlawful discriminations, and who shortly after the decision, in a speech in Washington, quoted the Supreme Court as saying that the effect of these cases "was to forbid the adoption for sales purposes of any basing-point system." In fact, the inconsistent position of Federal Trade Commission officials testifying before the Senate committee was nothing less than shocking and scandalous. Diametrically opposing answers were given to identical questions submitted by Senators to them.

The Commission attorneys were asked if the Commission's orders in the Conduit and Pittsburgh-plus cases required f. o. b. mill selling. Commission Attorney Walter Wooden, senior associate counsel, replied "No," but Commission Attorney Lynn Paulson answered, "As a practical matter, I say 'Yes.'"

When those attorneys were asked if "knowing parallel conduct" was illegal "irrespective of whether it results from conspiracy or from competition," Attorney Wooden replied "No," but Attorney Paulson replied "It is in the Conduit order."

And when those attorneys were asked if the Supreme Court had limited the right to meet competition to individual cases, Commission Attorney Wooden said "Yes," and Commission Attorney Paulson said "No."

They were asked if the Conduit and Pittsburgh-plus orders permitted those sellers to absorb freight to meet competition. Commission Attorney Wooden said "Yes." But Commission Attorney Paulson said, "I say the practical effect of those two orders is to require f. o. b. mill selling." These quotations by the Commission attorneys are taken directly from the stenographic transcript of the public hearings of the Senate Trade Policies Committee. They are of course available to the public, and I am advised that the Federal Trade Commission purchased a copy from the reporter, so that presumably this testimony was available to Chairman Freer before he made his Denver speech.

This disagreement within the Commission is not limited to the attorneys. The Commission's chief economist, Corwin Edwards, appears to be in disagreement with Commission Attorney Walter Wooden, who was the trial attorney in the Cement case. Attorney Wooden testified before the Senate committee, "I think I would disagree with Dr. Edwards to some extent," and when asked if he disagreed with Dr. Edwards' writings that "when you outlaw freight absorption you impair competition by denying the buyer the right to buy competitively from distant sellers," Mr. Wooden replied, "I think I disagree with that."

The disagreement of these men is apparently mutual. For when Dr. Edwards was asked on the witness stand if he agreed with the views of Fetter and Wooden favoring required f. o. b. pricing for everyone, he replied, "In that respect, no."

The extent to which confusion prevails on this subject is further illustrated by the first draft of a book which Dr. Edwards wrote 2 months before he was hired recently by the Federal Trade Commission as its Chief Economist. In that draft of his book he said:

It is to be hoped, however, that the Federal Trade Commission will abandon its present efforts to require rigid f. o. b. mill pricing in the terms of orders which it issues in cases of this class, or that the courts will modify the Commission's orders sufficiently to avoid that result.

Dr. Edwards testified at the Senate public hearings that after writing the book he submitted it to friends on the Commission, from whom he learned that he had incorrectly judged the Commission's attitude on this subject. He testified that after reading the printed material available to the public, he had come to the above conclusion, and only after checking with the people in the Commission did he find the view was erroneous.

On October 12, 1948, the Commission published a nine-page single-spaced statement intended to clarify the law on this subject. The following month Commission attorneys were asked at the Senate hearings the following question: "Do you think there is now confusion in the law as to what pricing policies are legal?" Two Trade Commission attorneys answered, "Definitely." Many other examples of inconsistencies in the public statements of Commission officials could be pointed out.

The printed record makes it crystal clear that officials of the Federal Trade Commission have not been saying that the recent cases are limited to conspiracy situations, and the printed record is equally clear that the Commission is divided within itself. While Commissioner Freer says that the law does not prevent freight absorption, does not require uniform f. o. b. mill prices, and is limited to conspiracy cases, Commissioner Mason in a speech at Harvard University on May 14, 1948, said:

Freight absorption is out. This affects every basic industry in the United States. * * * Individual universal delivered price system is out. * * * The basing point pricing system is out as a matter of law.

Industry and the Congress do not know who to believe, since all the people at the Federal Trade Commission were supposed to be experts. In the present confused status businessmen must learn the hard way and the expensive way who is correct. Candidly the American people are entitled to know what pricing systems are legal, and apparently the only place where a clarification of this important economic problem can be obtained is in the Congress. It dare not permit any Commission to continue to be all things to all people. We cannot permit some officials of the Commission to publicly state one view to be the policy of the Commission, while other officials give a diametrically opposed view of the same Commission's position. Congress must clear this thing up once and for all.

The bills introduced by Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado were read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, as follows:

S. 236. A bill to clarify and formulate a consistent and coordinated national policy with respect to transportation costs in interstate commerce; to strengthen the antitrust laws of the United States and to provide for their more effective enforcement; and to promote competition by permitting sellers to have access to distant markets;

S. 237. A bill to promote interstate and foreign commerce and strengthen the national defense by providing for cargo aircraft adaptable for postal, commercial, and military service, and for other purposes; and

S. 238. A bill to amend section 25 of the Interstate Commerce Act to require certain common carriers by railroad to install and maintain communication systems and to establish and observe operating rules, regulations, and practices to promote safety of employees and travelers on railroads, and for other purposes.

CHANGE IN METHOD OF ELECTING PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. HOEY], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. STENNIS], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. NEELY], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], and myself, I reintroduce in the form of a joint resolution my proposal for a constitutional amendment abolishing the electoral college and splitting the electoral vote in each State in exact proportion to the popular vote. I ask unanimous consent that there be printed at this point in the RECORD a very brief statement descriptive of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 2) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of President and Vice Presdent was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The statement presented by Mr. LODGE was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LODGE

The present arrangement whereby each State has a number of electoral votes equal to the number of its Representatives and Senators is retained under the Lodge amendment, but these votes would be divided between the candidates according to the proportion of the popular vote each receives. Under this arrangement, a candidate who receives 60 percent of the popular vote in a State with 10 electoral votes would get 6 votes and his opponent would get 4. Under the present system, the winner gets all 10, even when he beats his opponent in a photofinish.

In reintroducing this measure, LODGE pointed out how the 1948 Presidential election illustrated, in three different ways, the need for reform:

1. The will of the largest group of American voters which wanted to keep President Truman in the White House came dangerously close to being utterly frustrated by the antiquated "unit rule" system. A switch of fewer than 100,000 votes in five States (Illinois, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa, Nevada) would have given Governor Dewey the election, even with Mr. Truman still retaining his lead of two and a half million popular votes. Under the Lodge proposal, this comparatively small switch would not have changed the result. Short of a direct popular election of the President, the Lodge amendment comes as close as possible to reflecting exactly the will of the people.

2. A shift of a few thousand votes in as few as two States would have created a situation in which no candidate would have received a majority of the electoral votes. This would have left the country uncertain as to who would be President until the new House of Representatives made its choice, with State delegations voting as a unit so that each State would have only 1 vote. Not only would this have created grave uncertainty, unrest, and confusion, but it might well have been disastrous because of the delicate international situation. Because the Lodge amendment provides that the candidate receiving the greatest number of electoral votes shall be President, the possibility of such deadlocked decisions is eliminated, as is also the clumsy and universally condemned system of election in the House.

3. In one State (Alabama) it was not possible to vote for President Truman because his "electors" were not on the ballot. Consequently, many citizens of that State were in effect disenfranchised. Since the electoral college—and the dummy office of elector—is abolished in the Lodge amendment, such an undemocratic procedure becomes impossible.

The effect of the Lodge amendment would have several other important results:

1. It ends the present practice of concentrating Presidential politics on those States having the largest population and consequently on the voting minorities in those States.

2. It means that each candidate is credited with the votes cast for him and that he does not get credited with the votes actually cast against him.

3. It spreads the Presidential campaign and any subsequent Presidential activity into all the 48 States, tending, therefore to break up so-called "solid" or one-party areas.

4. It preserves completely the rights of the small States who still retain their two-vote credit (for the two Senators) in the number of electoral votes awarded.

5. It recognizes that the electoral college system has never functioned as originally conceived by the framers of the Constitution, for the electoral college has become a rubber stamp—and an inaccurate rubber stamp at that.

6. It discourages the tendency to select Presidential nominees only from among the residents of States having a significant electoral vote.

7. It weakens the strength of minority splinter-party pressures.

8. It confers no partisan or sectional advantage.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. MYERS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 11), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

Resolved, That subsection 2 of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to cloture, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"If at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of rule III or rule VI or any other rule of the Senate, a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the

Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question:

" 'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting, then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. MORSE. I submit a resolution to amend the so-called cloture rule of the Senate, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and I wish to say that I hope at a later hour to explain it at some length.

The resolution (S. Res. 12) was received and referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That subsection 2 of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to a cloture, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"If at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of rule III or of rule VI or any other rule of the Senate, a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question:

" 'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting, then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 2 hours on the measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same; except that any Senator may yield to any other Senator all or any part of the aggregate period of time which he is entitled to speak; and the Senator to whom he so yields may speak for the time so yielded in addition to any period of time which he is entitled to speak in his own right. It shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Under the order of business of "Introduction of Bills and Joint Resolutions," the following occurred:

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], and the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], I submit a resolution relating to cloture. This resolution is in the exact language of Senate Resolution 25, Eightieth Congress, second session, which was reported in April 1947 by the Committee on Rules, which remained on the calendar under my name until final adjournment. This resolution seeks to make it possible, when two-thirds of the membership of the Senate shall approve, to end debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, and to vote upon the merits of the question. In plain words, it endeavors to make it possible for the Members of the Senate to vote on any subject within a reasonable time and after reasonable debate on the pros and cons when two-thirds of its membership believe that it is desirable to come to a vote. I think the American people expect such action. I hope that this resolution will be considered at an early date.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, to offer it at this time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. Are we not operating under the heading of "Bills and resolutions," and is it necessary to get unanimous consent to offer a resolution under that heading?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is proceeding under the order of bills, joint resolutions, and other resolutions.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I understood, when I desired to offer my antifilibuster resolution earlier today that it required unanimous consent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At that time it could be offered under unanimous consent.

Mr. MORSE. Is the Senator from Oregon mistaken in understanding that in reply to the Senator from Kentucky the Chair ruled that unanimous consent was not necessary to offer the resolution which was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL]? So far as the subject matter is concerned, the situation is identical with that of the resolution of the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the Senator from Oregon asked unanimous consent to offer his resolution.

Mr. MORSE. No; the Senator from Oregon did not. The Chair ruled earlier that unanimous consent was necessary.

Mr. BARKLEY. No Senator raised the point of order that it was necessary to have unanimous consent. I raised a parliamentary inquiry as to whether, under the heading of "Bills and resolutions," unanimous consent was required to offer a resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, that is exactly what I am trying to find out: whether, when the Senator offered his resolution, unanimous consent was required by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At this stage, unanimous consent is required for the submission of a resolution.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let us clear it up. Does that refer to joint resolutions only?

Mr. MORSE. That is the point I am trying to have settled.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. BARKLEY. Introduction of bills and joint resolutions is the present business, and there is another heading for concurrent and other resolutions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is correct.

The resolution (S. Res. 13) submitted by Mr. SALTONSTALL (for himself, Mr. KNOWLAND, Mr. FERGUSON, and Mr. IVES) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That subsection 2 of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to cloture, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"If at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of rule III or rule VI or any other rule of the Senate, a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question:

" 'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a two-thirds vote of those voting, then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

Mr. HAYDEN (for himself and Mr. WHERRY) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 14), which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

"Resolved, That in no case shall a page of the Senate be appointed for duty in the Senate Chamber who is younger than 12 years, or remain in office after the age of 16 years," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Resolved, That in no case shall a page of the Senate be appointed for duty in the Senate Chamber who is younger than 14 years, or remain in office after the age of 17 years, and who has not completed the eighth grade of school."

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Resolved, That subsection 2 of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to cloture be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"If at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of rule III or rule VI or any other rule of the Senate, a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and, upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question:

"'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a two-thirds vote of those voting, then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same, and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

The cost of stenographic services to report the educational material and data on such hearings shall not exceed 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000 for this project, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

All questions of germaneness or relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and decided without debate."

Such committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is further authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation of the operation of the court-martial systems of the Army and Navy, both within the United States and abroad, and of the prisons, jails, and other places of incarceration or confinement of Army and Navy prisoners with particular emphasis on (1) alleged miscarriages of justice arising out of the operation of such systems and places of incarceration or confinement; (2) the question of whether variations in such systems or in the administration and application thereof in different areas or theaters of operations, with respect to review procedure or otherwise, constitutes or has constituted denial of due process or of equal protection of law in violation or derogation of the Constitution of the United States; (3) the question of whether or not punishments meted under such systems are unduly excessive; (4) the alleged lack of uniformity in punishments meted under such systems; (5) the question of whether or not present methods of holding courts martial are desirable and proper; and (6) any desirable improvements in or modifications of such court-martial systems and places of incarceration or the administration thereof.

The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date not later than December 15, 1946, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as it may deem advisable.

The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per hundred words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $50,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

"'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"If such question shall be decided in the affirmative by a two-thirds vote of those voting in the case of any such motion to take up a measure, together with any and all points of order against such measure, then such measure shall be deemed to be the unfinished business.

"If such question shall be decided in the affirmative by a two-thirds vote of those voting in the case of any such motion to bring to a close the debate upon any pending measure, then such measure shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of. Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 1 hour on the pending measure, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same and it shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS—RESOLUTION BY THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF THE PORTLAND LABOR-MANAGEMENT COMMITTEE

[Mr. MORSE asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Portland Labor-Management Committee regarding labor-management relations, which appears in the Appendix.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The morning business is closed.

REPUBLICAN REPRESENTATION ON FOREIGN RELATIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I understand that the able majority leader is not presenting for action this afternoon the recommendation of the Democratic majority in respect to committee memberships in the Eighty-first Congress. I understand that consideration of this subject, through his courtesy, is put off until tomorrow in order to permit the Republican side of the Senate to submit its suggestions at the same time the majority suggestions are presented.

Since I shall not be here tomorrow, because of personal reasons with which most Senators are familiar, I cannot allow this occasion to pass without stating for the RECORD my very great disappointment that the Democratic conference has seen fit in this connection to take the first partisan action in opposition to the theory and spirit of bipartisan cooperation in foreign affairs which has prevailed in the past 2 years.

I do not question the right of my friends across the aisle to apply their percentage of membership, as they see fit, to any committee in the Senate. They had to make a voluntary choice as between committees in selecting those to which the more drastic penalty of curtailed minority membership should be applied, the penalty of reducing the minority membership to five members. I merely wish to express my profound regret that in the exercise of that discretion and in the operation of that purely voluntary will they chose the Committee on Foreign Relations as one of those upon which the minority side of the committee should be reduced to the maximum possible.

Mr. President, I repeat, I do not question their right to make this order, I do not question the character of the splendid Senators who are recommended for new membership, but I do question the wisdom of an act which is implicit with hostility, as it will be interpreted by the country, to the maintenance in the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations of an atmosphere in which partisan politics has not entered for one single second during the past 2 years. The Senator from Texas suggests to me the past 4 years; I agree with him.

But here is a decision, Mr. President, which is a political decision. I absolve the Senator from Kentucky and his associates from any conscious purpose to do the thing I am talking about in respect to its implications, but I submit that the implications are inevitable. The implications will be viewed by the country as inevitable, and the implications are without justification, and the implications are utterly unsound as a matter of public policy.

When the maximum reduction in the Republican membership is deliberately applied to the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations what is the implication? The implication must be that in connection with the Administration's foreign program for this year, Republican Senators are not quite trustworthy, and that there must be faithful partisan Democrats, to the maximum, put upon the committee for the sake of the national welfare.

Mr. President, my friends across the aisle probably do not intend that challenge or that purpose. But I submit that the implication is inevitable. It is an implication which I have heard from disillusioned colleagues on this side of the aisle ever since the news became known. It is an implication which will inevitably be construed by the country as I have indicated.

I ask, Is the implication just? That is the reason for my rising. I care far less about the impact of the new percentage itself. Of itself, it is a very little thing. But I care a very great deal about whether or not the Democratic side of the Senate is justified in an action which carries the dubious implication to which I have referred.

Mr. President, I shall never live long enough not to be unalterably proud of the solidarity of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, Democrats and Republicans alike, during the last two critical years of this country's history. I shall never cease to be proud of the fact that never once was a partisan word uttered in all the considerations of that committee.

I shall never cease to be proud of the fact that although upon many occasions we started with violent differences of opinion in the committee in respect to various phases of proposed legislation, that never once through long, patient, careful quest of a common denominator in our thinking did we fail to produce a unanimous result. I am proud of the indispensable Republican contribution to that record which clothed American international authority with the power of unity.

I shall never cease to be proud of the fact—I hope some day a record of equal unpartisan values can be made—I shall never cease to be proud of the fact that upon 47 critical occasions in the Eightieth Congress, which in this aspect was not the worst Congress in history, the President of the United States to the contrary notwithstanding, but was the best Congress in history, this committee voted 13 to 0 in behalf of the national welfare. Thus we denied any possibility that any alien enemy might think they could divide and conquer us.

Mr. President, I submit that that sort of a record invites and deserves a different treatment—a far different acknowledgment—than is accorded to the Republican side of the Chamber in the Democratic proposal to reduce the Republican membership upon this committee to the utter minimum.

I desire to refer to one other factor in passing. If we Republicans were permitted to have the same minority representation in the Eighty-first Congress that the minority had in the Eightieth, the Republican side of the Senate would produce representation on the Foreign Relations Committee for the great west coast of the country. We should have filled our one vacancy, which is now denied to us, with a distinguished Republican Senator from the Pacific area. Due to the fact that we shall not be permitted to correct this lapse, which we have recognized for a long time, the committee, as it will stand, will again be without a single representative from that great Pacific area of the United States which has such a desperately intimate interest in foreign affairs.

Under all the circumstances my colleagues will understand why I deeply regret the situation which we confront. I would not overemphasize it. Of itself it is perhaps relatively insignificant. But I hope it is not an omen for the future, because in my view we are still in the grip of those times, Mr. President, when in respect to foreign relations we must think of our country first and our party second. I am sure that will continue to be the general pursuit and aspect of affairs. I am sure our friends across the aisle will undertake to permit us a full measure of cooperation. But I respectfully submit, Mr. President, that this is a very unhappy initiation of the enterprise, because cooperation has to be a two-way street and confidence must be mutual.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I regret the necessity in this first real session of the Senate to indulge in anything that might even seem to be a controversy over the assignment of Members of the Senate to committees. The situation which we confronted in determining in the first place how many committees should have a ratio of 8 to 5, and how many should have a ratio of 7 to 6, was one that presented difficulties.

We have, as a result of the election, a majority of 12, the ratio being 54 to 42. In the Eightieth Congress the majority of the Republicans was 6, the ratio being 51 to 45. Obviously the Democratic steering committee in undertaking to provide membership on committees for the increased majority of Members on this side was compelled to increase the number of committees that would have a ratio of 8 to 5.

In the last Congress, with a majority of six, the then majority decided on three committees that would have a ratio of 8 to 5, not including the Appropriations Committee, which had a larger ratio because of a larger membership.

The steering committee decided, and, based upon the representation of the two sides it seems a just decision, that we should have eight committees that would have a ratio of 8 to 5.

In the discussion of the question as to whether the Committee on Foreign Relations should be one of those eight there were many things that had to be considered. In the first place, 2 years ago, when the committee was organized, it became necessary to drop three Democratic members from the Committee on Foreign Relations because of the Reorganization Act, which limited the membership of committees and limited the number of committees in the Senate.

In addition to that we had a larger proportion, I should say, of Members on this side who had tried to become members of the Committee on Foreign Relations for a number of years, or ever since they had been in the Senate, than of any other committee. It is a desirable committee, and, naturally, in view of world affairs, Senators appreciate membership on it because they wish to contribute whatever they can to the solution of the international problems that face us.

I appreciate all that the Senator from Michigan has said in regard to the attitude of the Committee on Foreign Relations during the past 2 years during which I have been a member of it, and for a longer time than that. But I also want to call attention to the fact, and emphasize it, that even in the Seventy-eighth Congress, when we had a larger majority than we have now, and when the Committee on Foreign Relations was larger than it is now, and when we had a larger proportionate majority than would provide for even that 8-to-5 ratio, we initiated the so-called nonpartisan and bipartisan approach to all problems of international character.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], who was then the chairman of that committee, in appointing a subcommittee to confer with the President and with the Secretary of State to try to work out a nonpartisan, bipartisan foreign relations program, appointed a subcommittee of eight, four Republicans and four Democrats. My recollection is that the Senator from Michigan, Mr. Vandenberg, the then Senator from Vermont, Mr. Austin, the then Senator from Maine, Mr. White, and the then Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. La Follette, were the four representing the minority. The Senator from Texas, the Senator from Georgia, Mr. George, the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Barkley, and first the then Senator from Iowa, Mr. Gillette, and later the Senator from Utah, Mr. Thomas, represented the majority on that committee.

So that even long before the war ended, and before the death of President Roosevelt, the Committee on Foreign Relations thought that it saw far enough ahead to begin the foundations of a foreign policy that would be bereft of partisan politics, and even with a larger majority than we have now, the Senator from Texas provided an equal representation from both sides in that committee in trying to work out the foreign policy; and I think the Senator from Michigan will agree also that we did not hand the minority a bill of goods and say "take this."

In the very initiation, in the very beginning of the talks and conversations, first with Secretary Hull and later with Secretary Stettinius, we started from scratch, and we worked our way along inch by inch and sentence by sentence and page by page, and everybody, regardless of his politics, had an opportunity, and exercised it, to express his views in regard to everything leading up, for instance, to the Charter of the United Nations, and the entire foreign policy of our Government.

So that it is not quite accurate to emphasize that only in the Eightieth Congress was this nonpartisan and bipartisan approach maintained, for it was maintained even back in the Seventy-eighth Congress and through the Seventy-ninth Congress and it was continued in the Eightieth Congress.

I have heretofore expressed my profound appreciation and gratitude to the Senator from Michigan and to other Senators on the Republican side serving on the Committee on Foreign Relations, and even those who are not members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for the unity of approach which we have been able to attain in regard to foreign relations and international policy.

In determining what we should do in regard to the proportion of membership on this committee, we had no thought of any partisan division in respect to the actions of the committee. We had a problem to solve in regard to our own membership. We were confronted with twice the majority the other side had in the last Congress. We worked out a proportion which is based upon the pattern set by the Eightieth Congress. Wherever there was a fraction of a percentage, the majority took the whole and not the fraction. There is no way by which we can divide a man into halves or thirds. We must deal with whole numbers. We adopted the same pattern, and the proportion is almost the same, though slightly different both in the Appropriations Committee and in the Committee on Foreign Relations. However, we did not feel, and we do not now feel that the presence or absence of any one man on the Committee on Foreign Relations would make any difference so far as its attitude toward international problems is concerned. In view of the situation which confronted us in trying in the first place to restore to membership on the committee Senators who had to be dropped under the law 2 years ago, and the fact that there was an effort to give membership on the committee to some Senators who had sought to obtain membership upon it, whose records in the Senate are equally satisfactory and equally positive with respect to our international relations, I do not feel that we were in any way violating the proprieties by including the Committee on Foreign Relations as one of those to have a ratio of 8 to 5.

I shall regret it if there is any implication to be drawn from this fact from a partisan viewpoint. I do not know to what extent such implication would have been drawn by the public if nothing had been said about it today. But inasmuch as it has been mentioned, I wish completely to disclaim, not only for myself, but for the entire Democratic majority and for the steering committee which worked out these assignments, any sinister motive. I refuse, with all the force I command, any implication on the part of anyone that we have in any way been actuated by partisan politics or by any remote reflection upon the good faith, patriotism, or willingness of the members of that committee to go forward, as they have in the past, in a united spirit in dealing with our relationships with other nations.

This was one of the practical situations with which we had to deal. I suppose those who wish to do so may draw some implication from the circumstances, to which they will attribute motives of party politics. The question of politics was not even discussed. The question of the attitude of Democrats or Republicans on the committee was not even discussed. We were seeking to meet a situation which confronted us, and we have met it, we think, in the best and most practical way possible.

It is always regrettable that Senators may not be assigned to the committees which they prefer. That applies to both sides of the Chamber. But we are all young yet, and there is a great future before us. As the Republican candidate said in the last campaign, our future lies before us. Therefore all Members of the Senate have a perfect right to aspire to membership on this committee as soon as circumstances will permit.

Mr. President, there is quite a difference between the existing situation and the situation which prevailed 2 years ago. This proportion takes no Senator off the committee, whereas 2 years ago we lost four members of the committee by reason of the operation of the law at that time. It may not be important, but it is a fact that by this ratio we do not remove any Senator from the committee. All Senators who are on the committee will remain on the committee, both majority and minority, with the exception of Senator Hatch, of New Mexico, who has retired from the Senate, and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who suggested that he be switched from the Committee on Foreign Relations to the Committee on the Judiciary, partly in order to take care of Senators who had been previously dropped. Furthermore, when I assume the office of Vice President, there will be a vacancy on the committee.

Mr. MORSE subsequently said: Mr. President, I wish to make a few remarks on the subject on which the Senator from Michigan so ably addressed the Senate this afternoon.

I listened to the Senator from Kentucky in his reply to the Senator from Michigan. So far as I am concerned, I wish to say that I felt that most of his remarks were irrelevant and immaterial to the question which the action of the Democratic caucus has raised in regard to the continuation of a bipartisan foreign policy.

I wish to make one point very clear at the beginning: I am willing to eliminate myself from the consideration of this subject matter. If it be true that it appeared that if the Foreign Relations Committee remained on a 7-to-6 basis, the junior Senator from Oregon would be appointed to that committee, and if that was one of the reasons why the Democrats adopted an 8-to-5 ratio, I here and now, for the good of the country and the principle of a bipartisan foreign policy, wish to assure the Democrats that I withdraw from any further consideration. However, there are other Republican Senators from the Pacific coast and other Democratic Senators from the Pacific coast who should be considered for membership on the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President——

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I shall not yield until I finish.

As I have just said, there are other Republican Senators from the Pacific coast and other Democratic Senators from the Pacific coast who should be considered for membership on the Foreign Relations Committee, because in my section of the country the people have Asia at their front door, and for some time now they have tried to make clear that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee should have at least one west coast member on it. I say that in the Eighty-first Congress the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate should have either one Republican or one Democratic member from the west coast.

The Senator from Kentucky talks about implications. I wish to say that the implications of the actions taken by the Democratic Members of the Senate in their caucus are perfectly clear. A few minutes ago we listened to the President of the United States deliver his message on the state of the Union. In that message there was not one word about the bipartisan policy, for which the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] is at least as responsible as is any other public servant in America. The least the President could have done would have been to recognize by name the distinguished Senator from Michigan and give credit, it seems to me, for what he has done in recent years in developing a truly bipartisan foreign policy. There can be no doubt that the wise counsel and able leadership of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] prevented some of the mistakes that otherwise would have been made in the conduct of our foreign affairs.

Of course, the implications are clear. The implications are that the Democrats propose to play partisan politics with war and peace. The implications are clear that if occasions arise where they think it desirable to play politics with foreign policy, they will stack the committee with a great majority of Democrats. That is quite out of line with the spirit and purpose of a bipartisan foreign policy. I wish to say that when the Senator from Kentucky talks about the situation which confronted the Democrats in the Seventy-eighth Congress, he should point out that since then we have had the Reorganization Act; and it is the Reorganization Act which, so far as ratio is concerned, gives to the Democrats, and also to the Republicans, their problems in regard to the number of Members who shall serve on the committees.

But let us consider what the Republican Congress did under the Reorganization Act. We recognized, Mr. President, that if we are going to have a bipartisan foreign policy, clearly there is a relationship between it and the membership of that committee. I submit that bipartisanship, so far as the personnel of the committee is concerned, means equal numbers to the extent that such an arrangement can be mathematically worked out. I here and now charge that mathematically the Democrats did not attempt to carry out the bipartisan foreign policy which characterized the Republicans, when we had the majority and reassigned membership on the Committee on Foreign Relations. We thought the best way to carry out a bipartisan foreign policy was to give, under the ratio, on that committee, as near an equal number to Senators on both sides of the aisle as was mathematically possible—and thus the 7-to-6 ratio.

I come now to the last point I wish to make, Mr. President. I do not desire to embarrass the Senator from Michigan, because I think my love for him and the great esteem with which I hold him are well known both in this body and throughout the country. But let us deal with a political reality; let us face the fact that not always has the great senior Senator from Michigan been confronted with unanimity among Senators on this side of the aisle in regard to a bipartisan foreign policy. Through his magnificent qualities of leadership, Mr. President, he has been a great co-captain with administration forces in carrying forward a bipartisan foreign policy, sailing our Ship of State on a rather even keel, in my judgment, in the interests of a true bipartisan foreign policy. What do Democratic Senators think they have done to the standing of the Senator from Michigan as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, among other Senators on this side of the aisle, when in this Congress he has to come before his fellow Republican Senators and raise his voice again and plead for a position which he thinks is right, in the interests of the country? I shall give you one man's opinion, Mr. President. My opinion is that if Democratic Senators wished to set about undermining the effectiveness of the great work of the Senator from Michigan among Senators on this side of the aisle, they could not have done a better job of it than they did when they adopted an 8-to-5 ratio for membership on the Foreign Relations Committee. I think I know whereof I speak, because today I have talked with a considerable number of Members of the Senate on this side of the aisle. I tell the Senate now, and Senators can take it for what it is worth—but from the standpoint of the country, it is a matter of vital importance—that from the point of view of a Senator on this side of the aisle, in my judgment, as of this moment, the action of the Democratic Senators has weakened the position of the Senator from Michigan so far as concerns his leadership in support of what Democratic Senators will in the future contend to be a bipartisan foreign policy. Members of the Senate on the Republican side of the aisle are saying, "What do you mean when you say 'bipartisan foreign policy'? The best evidence we have of what the Democrats mean by a 'bipartisan foreign policy' is that they took the first opportunity they had to undermine the position of the Senator from Michigan by changing the ratio of membership on the Foreign Relations Committee from 7 to 6 to 8 to 5." I consider the action taken to be in effect an insult and an act of effrontery to the Senator from Michigan because it weakens his position, on our side of the aisle, in support of a bipartisan foreign policy.

So far as the junior Senator from Oregon is concerned, I shall continue to fight for the type of foreign policy which my record stands for; and so far as I can recall, it is a record which does not show one vote at variance with the leadership of the distinguished Senator from Michigan. Because of my love for him and my appreciation of what he has done for our country, I say these words with a feeling of resentment against the action taken, for it will, in my opinion, be interpreted by some as a reflection on the leadership of the Senator from Michigan.

I hope that before Democratic Senators get through with this problem they will at least recognize the importance of taking the course of action necessary to give us at least one Democratic Senator from the west coast on the Foreign Relations Committee, so that the people of that section of the country will feel that they have a direct spokesman from their own territory who can help interpret, for the other Members of the Senate, what we consider to be the great, vital problems of the Pacific.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I do not wish to belabor this subject, but the Senator from Oregon rather intimated that the action of the Democratic steering committee was based upon some intimation that he might be a member of the Foreign Relations Committee if the ratio were different. I wish to assure the Senator from Oregon that so far as I am concerned, I had no knowledge or suspicion or intimation as to who might be an additional Republican member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The matter was not discussed or mentioned in the steering committee. I think the Senator from Oregon will give me credit for a sufficient degree of friendship for him over the years to understand that I would not be actuated by any such motives as that. So far as I am concerned, if I were still a member of that committee I should welcome the Senator from Oregon as a member of it.

Insofar as putting somebody from the West on the committee is concerned, I do not wish to be partisan in any respect, but the majority in the Eightieth Congress could have done that if they had seen fit to do so. They did not do it. They now, being the minority, complain because we are not doing it for them. The membership of a committee depends a good deal on the desire of Members of the Senate. They make their requests, and the requests are acted upon. They do not always concur with the viewpoint or the policy of the committee itself, and I do not think the question that there has been nobody on the Foreign Relations Committee from the West is any particular party's fault or any individual Senator's fault. It is just one of those things that has not worked out. Largely, as a rule, Senators from the West are interested in other matters besides foreign relations. They are interested in problems that affect the West, and they put in their requests as a rule for committees dealing with subjects in which they are vitally concerned.

So far as the Senator from Michigan is concerned, I do not think that anybody, especially the Senator from Michigan, and none of his friends, need be uneasy about the Senator's place in the history of the Senate or the history of the country, or the history of our foreign relations. Certainly the absence or the presence of one member of either party on the Committee on Foreign Relations will have no effect upon the Senator's standing in the country and in the Senate. I have too much respect for the patriotism and the sincerity of members of the Republican Party to believe that their attitude on the great question of international cooperation and interparty cooperation in dealing with foreign policy and affairs is to be affected by one man, and as to whether one man is or is not on the Committee on Foreign Relations. The position of the Senator from Michigan is safe. His place in the history of the country and in the Senate is secure, so he need not worry on this account, and I think no friend of his need worry. Certainly I am not worrying about it, because I do not think it is affected in the slightest degree.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, as a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, it is not possible for me to sit here and listen to what has been said without identifying myself completely with my distinguished colleague from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] in what he said, and with what my colleague from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] has just said. I have served on the Foreign Relations Committee for 2 years, and all of us on that committee, Republicans and Democrats alike, had a great experience of inspiration and patriotism in serving our country together in an absolutely nonpartisan way and as Americans in dealing with basic international problems.

My heart has been full ever since I first ran for public office with my belief that the peace of the world depended on a united America and a united American front in our dealings with other nations of the world. I supported every measure in this body, whether introduced on our side or on the Democratic side, which looked toward the cooperation of the world, and which has called upon us to stand together as Americans in this critical period of the world's history. I went through the experience of the whole development of the ECA program. I knew the difficulties and the opposition that would come to that. I pay tribute to the Senator from Michigan for the inspiring leadership which he displayed in taking what was originally the administration measure and bringing about an agreement, a meeting of the minds between both sides of the aisle, without any thought of partisanship. We all acted for the best interests of the people of America in presenting this form of recovery aid to the other nations of the world. No act could have been more important than the way in which that program was handled during this last year. I desire to go on record as sharing with the Senator from Michigan his statement that the Congress, which has been designated as the worst Congress in history, was the outstanding and best Congress in American history so far as our foreign relations are concerned.

Naturally, then, this morning when I heard that the change had been made in the committee set-up I felt deeply shocked. Certainly the 7-to-6 ratio could have been retained in this vital committee. There were other committees where necessary political adjustments could have been made. Heretofore, with full approval of the American people we have agreed that politics should be adjourned at the water's edge. We cannot let the American people down at this time.

Mr. President, I should be the last one ever to desert the bipartisan approach. I could not contemplate such a thing, not for one minute. I desire to continue to identify myself with an all-American approach to these problems. But, Mr. President, I have a sinking in my heart that this should have been done without giving thought to the implications of this action and the reflections on our own leader, who has done so much in joining with the President of the United States and with the Secretary of State in developing our all-American foreign policy. It is distressing to me beyond measure, and I say it is especially distressing because of the deep affection that I have come to hold for my colleagues on the left of the aisle, Democrats with whom we worked together, with whom we traveled together abroad, with whom we roomed together, in trying to find the answer to these problems, without ever a whisper of partisanship.

Mr. President, it is not possible for me to sit here and not express my convictions, and my regret that this should have happened at the very inception of the Eighty-first Congress.

THE NATIONAL HOUSING PROGRAM

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, today the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] introduced a national housing bill, which, so far as the general form is concerned, follows almost exactly the terms of the bill which he and I introduced at the last session and which has been introduced with bipartisan cooperation for the past 5 years.

This bill is 46 pages long. It was prepared without my knowledge by the administrative departments and sent to the Senator from Louisiana this morning. He called me up about an hour before the Senate met and showed me the bill. I had offered to sponsor with him the same bill which was introduced last year, but he pointed out that there were substantial changes, to which I shall refer. I had no opportunity to read the bill. Furthermore, the changes are very substantial.

The subject of housing has been a matter of bipartisan cooperation for 5 years. I was chairman of a subcommittee in a Democratic Congress which made the first over-all study of postwar housing and submitted certain recommendations. Both in the Seventy-ninth and Eightieth Congresses the bill was introduced with the support of the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], and myself. I regret very much that I am unable to add my name to the list of sponsors of the bill which has today been introduced with purely Democratic sponsorship—the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. LONG].

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I prefer to complete my statement. At the conclusion of my statement I shall be glad to yield.

Because of the shortness of time, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] also declined to permit their names to be used on the bill. We regret that we have not been able to join in sponsorship of this bill.

There are certain substantial changes, about which I certainly was not consulted at any time. The number of houses has been increased from 500,000 to the possibility of building more than 1,000,000 in 4 years. The annual expense of the subsidy has been increased from $190,000,000 to $445,000,000. The bonds of the various metropolitan housing authorities have been made taxable, which makes the expense to the Federal Government considerably greater.

I have not had an opportunity to examine the bill to determine whether there are other changes. In any event, the bill has been prepared without any consultation whatever with us, or any attempt to continue the bipartisan cooperation which has previously existed in regard to the housing policy.

The President of the United States used the following language in his message to the Congress today:

> I hope for cooperation from farmers, from labor, and from business. Every segment of our population and every individual has a right to expect from his Government a fair deal.
> They have a right to expect that the Congress and the President will work in the closest cooperation with one objective—the welfare of the people of this Nation as a whole.
> In the months ahead I know that I shall be able to cooperate with this Congress.

I can only conclude that in using that language the President meant cooperation with the Democratic majority, and not cooperation with the Republican minority in this Congress.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, my name is on the bill. Through the generosity of the Senate I shall be the chairman of the committee. I shall welcome any suggestions for changes which the distinguished Senator from Ohio desires to offer.

What the Senator from Ohio says about nonpartisan cooperation in the past few Congresses is correct so far as the Senate is concerned. But every time we passed a housing bill for the veterans or for the people of the United States, the Republican House of Representatives defeated the bill, either on the floor of the House because a rule could not be obtained for its consideration, or in conference.

So I wish to assure my friend the Senator from Ohio that, as chairman of the committee, I shall use every effort to bring about cooperation on the part of the Republican and the Democratic Members of the Senate, because certainly the distinguished senior Senator from Ohio has done much for housing legislation.

RUSSELL J. HOPLEY

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, on December 10, last, it was my privilege to attend a public affairs luncheon given by the citizens of Omaha, Nebr., in honor of one of its most distinguished citizens, who had but recently returned from a term of service here in Washington. I refer to Mr. Russell J. Hopley, president of the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co., who had been named Director of Civil Defense. The appointment was made by the President of the United States. Mr. Hopley was in Washington on this very important assignment for nearly a year. His services were rendered gratis. Mr. Hopley's address, delivered to the people of Omaha, should be made available to the Members of this body, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the body of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I also ask unanimous consent that the brief introductory remarks made by the vice president of the Omaha Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Charles S. Reed, be printed ahead of the address by Mr. Hopley.

Then, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial published in the Omaha Evening World-Herald of December 15, 1948, be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, immediately following the address by Mr. Hopley.

There being no objection, the addresses and the editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTRODUCTORY REMARKS OF CHARLES S. REED, VICE PRESIDENT OF THE OMAHA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, AT TESTIMONIAL LUNCHEON OF THE OMAHA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE ON DECEMBER 10, 1948, HONORING RUSSELL J. HOPLEY, RETIRING DIRECTOR OF CIVIL DEFENSE

Senator BUTLER, Governor Peterson, ladies and gentlemen:

Russell Hopley has honored the chamber of commerce by making his first general public appearance here since his return from Washington. Although I know that your presence today is solely a testimonial of your regard for Mr. Hopley, I do, on behalf of the chamber of commerce, wish to express our appreciation for your attendance at this luncheon.

We are especially grateful that Senator BUTLER and our Governor are here.

Since Russell Hopley came here in 1929, we have come to regard him as our own. I am sure, however, that no Omahan is the least bit jealous because his civic service was expanded into national fields. I have the pleasure of reading a message of national appreciation:

"I join with the citizens of Omaha in paying respect to one of its distinguished citizens, Russell J. Hopley. He has well served the National Military Establishment and the Nation during this past year as chairman of a committee studying civil defense planning, the report of which reflects the thoroughness of his organizational and administrative abilities. It is a fitting tribute that his fellow citizens have assembled at this testimonial luncheon to honor him.

"JAMES FORRESTAL,
"Secretary of Defense."

Before presenting the man you came to hear, I cannot resist a short recap of a life devoted to service.

I have heard the presiding officers, in keeping with the occasion, paint some very glowing pictures of our guests of honor. Sometimes the pictures were better than the subject, but I am not worried about such a possibility today because no one can overstate the accomplishments and character of our Russ Hopley.

Since he is an active leader in more than 25 local, State, and National organizations, I can only give you the high spots in his career.

He was born in Blue Island, Ill. Ambitious young people can take hope in the fact that his business career started as a collector for the telephone company at Fort Madison, Iowa. He served with distinction in the Signal Corps in World War I.

Early in life he began to devote a large share of his time and energy to the welfare of his community and State. His usefulness virtually forced him into leadership in a list of organizations that reads like a roster of human aspirations. Without attempting to emphasize one more than another, I refer to his devoted and sagacious leadership as chairman of the Omaha city-wide planning committee, which received national acclaim.

In the business field he was rapidly promoted to positions of increasing responsibility, until in 1937, he became operating vice president of the Northwestern Bell Telephone Co. He was elected president of his company in 1942, and we are glad that he continues in that capacity today.

With the invention and perfection of the airplane, radar, the atomic bomb, and guided missiles, and with the increasing possibility of mass destruction by bacteriological and chemical warfare, our Nation has become conscious of the necessity of planning for the security of our civil population in the unhappy event of another war.

It became the duty of the President of the United States to select a citizen to assume the responsibility of planning for the safety of our people in a national emergency. Even as a Republican, I am forced to admit that the President's selection of Russell Hopley was a stroke of genius. In March 1948, Mr. Hopley accepted the assignment as Director of Civil Defense Planning. The task ahead of him was new and uncharted. As he has always done in business and civic affairs, Russell Hopley devoted all of his keen insight, calm judgment, organizational ability, and tireless industry to getting the job done quickly and efficiently. His services were rendered gratis.

The character of his service is brought into relief by a consideration of the fact that in directing the work of a panel of 133 experts, organized into 10 advisory committees, he employed a staff of only 43 key persons.

On his judgment rested the possible future safety of millions of his fellow citizens. The consciousness of this obligation did not leave him for a minute. I had the pleasure of spending an evening with him in Washington several weeks ago. While he was his usual calm and gracious self, I could see evidence of his feeling of responsibility and the expenditure of his energy.

His approach to the problem and his ability were the talk of the Pentagon. Typical of the Russell Hopley we know, he completed his assignment with dispatch, and now he has returned to Omaha with no trace of Potomac fever.

His report has met with practically unanimous approbation. On November 22, President Truman personally expressed his thanks to Mr. Hopley, and the following day he was awarded a certificate of appreciation by Secretary Forrestal, the first such certificate ever presented a civilian.

Your attendance is a testimonial of your pride in this great Omaha citizen whose life is an example of civic service. Speaking for the Omaha Chamber of Commerce, I am proud and happy to present our distinguished fellow townsman, Mr. Russell J. Hopley.

ADDRESS BY RUSSELL J. HOPLEY, PRESIDENT, NORTHWESTERN BELL TELEPHONE CO. (FORMER NATIONAL DIRECTOR OF CIVIL DEFENSE PLANNING), OMAHA CHAMBER OF COMMERCE, PUBLIC AFFAIRS LUNCHEON IN HONOR OF THE SPEAKER, DECEMBER 10, 1948

CIVIL DEFENSE FOR NATIONAL SECURITY

Mr. Chairman, Senator BUTLER, Your Excellency Governor Peterson, distinguished guests, distinguished ladies at the center table, and friends, I want you all to know that I deeply appreciate this splendid recognition and tribute on the occasion of the completion of my special assignment in Washington. Even though, from my own standpoint, I know that this high compliment is not fully deserved, I nevertheless want you all to know that I appreciate it very much.

After almost 9 months of intensive work and activity as Director of Civil Defense Planning with Secretary of Defense Forrestal, it is good, indeed, to be back in Omaha.

An intimate picture of the Washington assignment, which has been referred to by some authorities as one of the most important undertakings in government at this time, and some of the significant developments in the activity might be of interest.

I will endeavor to relate a few of the high lights together with a brief historical outline in connection with this most important undertaking.

On February 15 of this year, the report of the then War Department Civil Defense Board, which later became known as the Bull Board since it was headed up by Maj. Gen. Harold Bull, was released for public information. One of the principal recommendations of this board was that a general civil defense plan should be formulated for the United States, its Territories and possessions.

Little time was lost following the issuance of this report since 7 days after its release—on February 22—my telephone rang and as a result of a meeting at that time with Secretary of Defense Forrestal, and other high-ranking members of the Military Establishment and representatives of the Federal Government, he asked me to head up, organize, and direct the development of the fundamental civil defense plans and organizational structure for the country.

To visualize the need and necessity for a strong and sound civil defense plan and organization for our country, it is first necessary to think in terms of past, current, and future developments, such as:

1. Until this century, wars had been mainly contests between opposing bodies of fighting men and armies. Relatively few civilians were exposed to actual physical contact with the fighting—and those that were were the ones unfortunate enough to be caught in the paths of armies. Generally, civilians far from the scene of actual fighting suffered only heartaches and hardships.

2. That our homeland has been fortunate enough not to have suffered the devastation apparent everywhere in the stricken cities of Europe and Japan during World Wars I and II.

3. That there is no guaranty that if we are unfortunate enough to be involved in another conflict, that the cities of this country and our teeming industrial areas will not be potential targets of an enemy.

4. In the last decade, there has been an ever-growing list of instruments of destruction. Their use has not been confined merely to opposing armies—and one need only think of London, Coventry, Hamburg, Cologne, Berlin, Tokyo, Nagasaki, and Hiroshima to realize how war can now reach into cities far from the scene of actual battle.

5. Up to this time, we here in the United States have been fortunate—since two great oceans have served as effective barriers against large-scale enemy operations.

6. No American city has listened to the wail of a siren warning of real danger in this country, the rush of falling bombs, or the thunder of bomb explosions.

7. Nor, during enemy operations, have we had to live in constant fear that high-explosive bombs, incendiaries, atomic bombs, guided missiles, or buzz bombs would, with destructive force, land in our midst at any moment.

8. No longer can we in this country assume that we are safe from these dangers.

9. Weapons developed in the last stages of World War II, new weapons that have come into being since, as well as those that will be developed in the future, have made our country just as vulnerable as any other part of the world.

10. Both time and distance have dissolved and no one needs a crystal ball to see the possibility that the future may bring another Pearl Harbor or even a score or more of simultaneous Pearl Harbors to our own shores.

11. The objective of enemy action against our country today would be to render our cities and production facilities inoperative, thus minimizing the will to resist on the part of the people.

It is not within my sphere to make predictions as to whether this country will experience another war—I certainly hope and we all hope, and we all must assume, that the various peace agencies of governments throughout the world will be successful in negotiating a basis for lasting peace.

Certainly we all hope that another war with all of its horrors and suffering and loss of life and destruction will never come.

Yet, in these days of insecurity it is wise for us to go a step further than the classic statement of "keeping our powder dry." We must be prepared for the day of a new type of war more terrible, more frightful, more destructive, and more devastating than any of those of the past.

We have heard much, since World War II, of the necessity for a strong national defense. We in this country have taken steps to strengthen our Army, our Navy, and our Air Force and their supporting agencies but there is a missing link in our defense structure, and that missing link is civil defense.

Civil defense as related to national defense broadly means the organization of the people to minimize the effects of and recovery from enemy action—more specifically, it is:

The mobilization, organization, and direction of the civilian populace and necessary supporting agencies to minimize the effects of enemy action directed against people, communities, industrial plants, and other installations—and to maintain or restore those facilities essential to civil life and to preserve the maximum civilian support of the war effort.

With all of this as our premise, we undertook the process of carrying out the terms of the directive which was issued in establishing our organization—

"To prepare and submit a program of civil defense including a plan for a permanent Federal civil defense agency which, in conjunction with the several States and their subdivisions, can undertake those peacetime preparations which are necessary to assure an adequate civil defense system in the event of an emergency."

As the first step, it was necessary to recruit an able and effective organization. To do this, and to effect a good balance, we reached out over all geographical sections of the country and brought in the top talent and ability in all of the various specialized fields that would be involved in a broad civil defense activity.

We deliberately kept our organization on the small side and carried on our work with 43 key people—including our good friend, Jim McCrory, who is assisting in the preparation of training material—together with an outstanding group of 133 consultants and advisers selected from the fields of science, education, business, industry, and labor and other similar groups. It was highly significant that in asking people to serve with us, we had not one refusal on the part of anyone to serve.

Very often people would ask the question "How many people are working on the civil defense activity?" My usual answer was "In the first place, all of our people are working. Actually, we have 43 key people and 133 consultants and advisers"—then, the usual response would be something like this, "Well, my goodness, with the large amount of work involved in a problem of this sort, we thought perhaps you had four or five hundred people on the job."

In taking up our work, we had available to us the experience, recommendations, and findings of the United States strategic bombing survey in Europe and Japan and the World War II activities and experiences of the civil defense organizations in Europe, Japan, and in England, and in our own country.

It may surprise some of you to learn that Japan had the oldest civil defense system, since theirs was first organized in 1923. Japan's system was not too effective for the reason that the military kept telling their people that an enemy attack could never come to Japan—the result was the people did not work at it.

Germany had what could have been a strong system of civil defense, but for the fact that there were too many people reaching out for power and constantly attempting to exert political control over the various segments of the organization. In addition, the organization was hampered by administrative muddles. The result was constant conflict and their system did not work too well.

England had the strongest and most effective civil defense program—their system was organized 4 years prior to World War II. The people worked at it and the result was an effective system and one that contributed greatly to the survival of England and the actual winning of the war.

In our current planning activity we undertook to avoid the pitfalls and errors in all of the previous experiences and to develop a plan that would stand up as being sound, simple, workable, and acceptable and to avoid overlapping, duplication, and confusion.

In addition, we approached every phase of our work on the basis that as far as the end result was concerned that there could be no road blocks, no barriers, and no obstacles in the way of our turning out the right kind of a job—and further, that "we had been given the job to do and that we were going to do it."

During the course of our work, we held many meetings with representatives from the armed services; the various branches of Federal, State, and local government; representatives from some foreign governments; and many private organizations, groups, and individuals. We had the finest of cooperation and assistance from all of these groups.

In a nut shell, we brought together the best advice and experience of all interested groups in our entire activity.

Briefly, our final program entitled "civil defense for national security" proposes:

1. The establishment of a permanent Federal Office of Civil Defense to be established within the executive branch of the Government and to be headed by a strong and able civilian director.

2. Within this Office would be a technical staff, headed by a deputy director, with divisions comprising: communications, engineering, fire services, police services, warden services, and emergency transportation.

3. A plans and operations staff, headed by a deputy director, with divisions comprising:

organization and methods, mobile reserves and mutual aid, evacuation, aircraft observers and air raid warning, manpower and matériel, plant protection, and civilian war aid.

4. A training staff, headed by a deputy director, including: field services, methods and training materials, public education, schools and colleges, and leadership training.

5. A medical and health services and other special weapons defense staff, headed by a deputy director, to include medical and health services, radiological defense, chemical defense, and other special weapons defense.

6. We also propose the establishment of regional coordinators to assist in coordinating matters between the States and Federal organization and with the military and other agencies, when involved.

7. Our plan contemplates the establishment of a civil defense agency within each State—starting with the governor as the responsible head—then the appointment of an advisory council, composed of representative citizens of the State to advise and counsel on civil defense matters, and the State activity to be headed up by a director. The various operating divisions in the State organization would be similar to those in the Federal organization.

8. Similarly, in each community the establishment of a civil-defense agency under the mayor as the responsible municipal official, with an advisory council of representative citizens to advise and counsel on civil-defense matters, and the local activity to be headed up by a director. Here too, the various operating divisions in the local organization would be similar to those in the State and Federal organization.

9. Our entire plan is proposed on the basis of:

A. Placing full responsibility for operations in the States and communities where we think it properly belongs.

B. The Federal organization to furnish the leadership and guidance in organizing and training the people for civil-defense tasks, coordinating, training materials, and the advice and counsel that is needed.

C. Maximum utilization of volunteers, existing agencies and organizations—governmental, public, and private—and all available skills and experiences.

D. Well organized and trained units in communities throughout the country prepared and equipped to meet the problems of enemy attack, and to be ready against any weapon an enemy may use.

E. Intensive planning to meet the particular hazards of atomic or other modern weapons of warfare. (The atomic bomb is a triple-threat combination of (1) a high explosive, (2) a superincendiary, and (3) one of extreme radiation.)

F. A small nucleus peacetime organization which could be used in event of peacetime disasters such as fires, floods, explosions, tornadoes, and other similar catastrophies, and that could be quickly expanded to meet the exigencies of a given situation in a war emergency.

G. The plan and the legislation that we propose have been developed on a model basis for the Federal, State, and municipal organization, and can be easily modified and adjusted to meet a particular situation in the community or State.

H. Our plan and legislation also contemplate that the organization will not engage in any political activity or any other activities outside of the purely civil-defense field. We recognize that many other activities of various types will need to be carried on under different conditions but it is our thought that these should be organized separately from civil defense.

The basis of civil defense as related to a community sums up as follows:

1. The individual, who, with proper training and information, such as first aid, fire detection and prevention, detection of areas contaminated by war gases, ionizing radiation and other similar training, must in the event of an emergency take care of himself.

2. The family, similarly, with training, must take care of itself.

3. The community should as a general proposition organize to handle any emergency within the community. If the emergency were of such proportions that the community were completely overwhelmed and beyond its own capacity to take care of itself, then the calling in of—

4. Mobile reserves set up on the basis of mutual aid. Our plan proposes the organization of mobile reserve battalions (class A and class B) that can be moved into an overwhelmed community from various locations throughout the several States.

Briefly, and without going into the complete detail, it is proposed that these mobile reserve battalions be organized on the basis of setting aside a certain percent or a certain part of the protection services in each community in the State (such as fire, police, medical, etc.), to be supplemented by volunteers in sufficient numbers to round out an effective unit.

Each unit would comprise medical services, fire-fighting services, rescue, and debris clearance, police services, radiological defense services, emergency feeding services, and installation and repair services.

Each unit would also have assigned to it 6 planes and 12 pilots from the Civil Air Patrol to assist in transportation, traffic control, and similar duties.

If, after the mobile reserves were called in and the community was still overwhelmed beyond the combined capacity of the community and the mobile reserves to handle the situation, then we believe the next step should be—

5. Military aid to civil power to operate under emergency plans that have been and are being developed. The last step then would be—

6. Martial rule. And then the civil defense would continue operations, but under a new boss.

Those who are in a position to know have termed the structure of our plan as the best that has been developed for any country up to this time.

I have been most interested and greatly impressed by the almost universal endorsement and approval that our recommended program has received far and wide over the country as a whole.

A typical cross section of reactions to our plan is well summed up by these excerpts from editorials appearing throughout the country:

Omaha (Nebr.) World-Herald, November 24, 1948: "A job well done. * * * It is simply a prudent and reasonable plan to supplement this country's armed might with an adequate civil-defense program. The * * * committee has submitted such a program."

New York (N. Y.) Times, November 14, 1948: "We commend it (the plan) to Congress and to all citizens as a reasonable and important document. * * * The sooner a Civil Defense Act is passed here and put into effect the better it will be. This is an act of prudence that should not be long delayed."

New York (N. Y.) Herald Tribune, November 15, 1948: "The able report on this subject represents a minimum structure. * * * The proposed system has been very carefully constructed."

Washington (D. C.) Post, November 16, 1948: "Precisely because it is the efficiency of the civil defense organization that may determine whether this country can withstand atomic war. That is the purpose of a new and admirably thorough study—Civil Defense for National Security."

Washington (D. C.) Evening Star, November 15, 1948: "To ignore the warnings contained in the remarkably comprehensive report, to fail to make reasonable preparations to deal with some future emergency because the prospects seem too remote, would be to take risks of the gravest sort."

Baltimore (Md.) Sun, November 15, 1948: "The report shows wisdom in that * * * it calls only for an establishment on a nucleus basis * * * at the moment the quality of leadership and basic organization is more important than the total number of persons enrolled."

Pittsburgh (Pa.) Press, November 19, 1948: "One of the important merits of the civil defense organization which has been proposed * * * is its use in times of peacetime emergency."

Birmingham (Ala.) Post, November 15, 1948: "With world affairs constantly on edge, no time should be lost in placing on paper at least plans for any emergency."

Dallas (Tex.) Daily Times-Herald, November 16, 1948: "The program * * * as outlined * * * serves as a grim reminder of the sort of world in which we live. Therefore, it is up to those of us who are civilians to start getting ready * * * without delay."

Waterloo (Iowa) Courier, November 17, 1948: "Careful study has been given the subject by the Office of Civil Defense Planning. There is no possible harm in the enactment of such a measure, and it might save precious time in the future."

Cheyenne (Wyo.) State Tribune, November 19, 1948: "It (the civil defense report) does not offer any glib answers."

St. Albans (Vt.) Daily Messenger, November 19, 1948: "The plan for a civil defense organization to meet the hazards of an enemy attack on this country, just set forth * * * is a most important adjunct of our national defense system."

Boston (Mass.) Herald, November 16, 1948: "It is not warmongering to be prepared, particularly in the crucial field of civil defense. * * * The new Congress should lose no time in studying these proposals and providing legislation to put them into effect."

Memphis (Tenn.) Commercial Appeal, November 14, 1948: "A thoroughly comprehensive * * * plan has been submitted. * * * It is a monumental piece of work reflecting tremendous credit."

Houston (Tex.) Post, November 16, 1948: "A comprehensive blueprint for the protection of the home front in case of war has been placed before Defense Secretary Forrestal."

Detroit (Mich.) Free Press, November 17, 1948: "Unhappily, every word of it is true. All we have is the book—a good basic text."

Lincoln (Nebr.) Evening Journal, November 15, 1948: "The committee * * * approached the problem as realistically as possible."

Fort Worth (Tex.) Star-Telegram, November 17, 1948: "It is not hysteria to exercise foresight in providing adequate defense for the American home front. * * * Every detail for civil defense for the United States should be supplied by the Voice of America and other means to the people of Russia and other militaristic states. When knowledge is world wide, another conflict on modern terms may be impossible."

We have reviewed our plans with many organizations and groups, such as the council of state governments, the conference of mayors, the American Municipal Association, and others, and have received splendid and encouraging reactions from all quarters.

As a result, we feel that we have achieved our original objective of producing a sound plan and one of which all can be justly proud.

I should like to take this opportunity to pay my tribute to Secretary Forrestal as being a great American who is devoting himself unselfishly to our country; and to our fellow Omahans Lieutenant General Wedemeyer and Major General Gruenther—with whom I had many contacts—as being great military leaders.

In conclusion, may I also compliment the chamber of commerce under the effective leadership of Tom Ashton and Charley Reed for their foresight and vision in undertaking a project of great importance to Omaha—I refer to adequate housing, not only to take care of the normal growth of the city—which, according to our company figures today, approaches 270,000 within the corporate limits and about 300,000 in the metropolitan area this side of the river—but to house the people who are now making Omaha their new home base such as the personnel of the Strategic Air Command and the other business and industries that are currently planning to locate here.

Thank you very much.

THE ATTACK ON HOPLEY

A great many Government executives—President Truman and Nebraska's Governor Peterson among them—have commented that it is difficult, and becoming increasingly so, to persuade first-rate Americans to accept appointment to public office.

The reason? Not enough salary and too much abuse.

The recent experience of Russell J. Hopley illustrates the latter point. As Director of the Office of Civil Defense Planning, Mr. Hopley didn't get any salary at all. He took the job, for a limited time, as a public service—as one of the things a responsible man ought to do when his country calls.

But as soon as his report had been completed and handed to Secretary Forrestal, the shooting started.

Walter Winchell screamed over the air that the Hopley report was part of a military conspiracy to take over the country and destroy the Bill of Rights. Drew Pearson echoed a week or two later with "Congratulations to Walter Winchell on the firing of Russell J. Hopley as the head of Forrestal's Civil Defense Committee. A great job for the people." Winchell added shortly afterward: "The best news for all Americans, except a few perhaps in Mr. Forrestal's Department, is this—there will be no Hopley bill. This was the plan for civil defense that would have superseded your Bill of Rights. Thank you, Mr. President."

Now, let's look at the record.

First, Russell Hopley was not "fired." We make that statement categorically. When he left Omaha to take charge of civil-defense planning he said repeatedly, emphatically, and publicly that he would stay only long enough to complete the necessary study and make a report. At that time he said he hoped he would be in Washington no more than 6 months.

He stayed 3 months longer—9 months, in total—to get the job finished. Then, as he had told Secretary Forrestal he would, he resigned. The Secretary asked him to reconsider, but he refused.

So much for the Pearson canard. Now let's look at the Winchell theory that Russell Hopley engineered a sneak attack on the Bill of Rights.

If Winchell had read the Hopley report, which on the evidence seems doubtful, he would have learned that its chief emphasis is on civilian cooperation at the local level. The Hopley planners simply attempted to set up a stand-by organization which would reduce losses and save lives if this country should become involved in an atomic-biologic-chemical war.

This Nation-wide organization would be headed by a small Federal department or bureau which would provide leadership and coordination—but which would have no authority whatever over the civil rights of the people.

In only one circumstance would the procedure outlined in the Hopley plan impinge on anybody's rights. The plan suggests that if a monstrous calamity—such as atomic bombing—should befall any community, probably martial law would be declared there. Can any rational person doubt that? Could any rational person oppose it?

It is conceivable that an atomic war might wipe out not only the Bill of Rights but the whole Constitution, the Capitol, the White House, the radio networks and the Messrs. Winchell and Pearson and their Hooperatings.

But Russell Hopley didn't invent the atomic bomb.

He is simply an honorable and patriotic American who gave 9 months of his life to devising a plan to protect his countrymen against the furies which may be launched against them in World War III, if it comes.

For that he has been subjected to vicious and ill-informed attack. Can anyone wonder that decent and self-respecting men, who value their good name, hesitate to take public jobs which may expose them to abuse by the likes of Walter Winchell and Drew Pearson?

DEFERMENT OF COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to thank the distinguished majority leader for withholding temporarily the assignments of the majority Members to committees. In my discussion with him I made the observation that it would please the minority if we might have 24 hours to consider the contemplated realinement of committee appointments and be able to iron out on our side of the aisle the assignments to committees in order that there should not be so much discussion on the floor of the Senate with reference to the subject. In my discussion with the distinguished majority leader I also made the observation that I felt we would be ready tomorrow to consider the minority assignments. I made that observation on the theory that the minority might caucus and consider today the assignments of the minority members. A conference has now been set for tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. I am wondering if the distinguished majority leader is ready to state when the assignments may be offered. I think they should be offered together. As I indicated, I think it will be difficult to get our realinement made before noon tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I am glad to accommodate our side to the requirements of the minority. I had hoped that we might have the committee assignments ready for tomorrow so that we might adjourn over until Monday. Otherwise I think we should have a session on Friday, because the matter should not go over into next week, for the reason that there is some proposed legislation which it is desired to consider very promptly. Therefore I express the hope that the minority may be ready tomorrow. If not, we can recess until Friday.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I want to thank the distinguished majority leader for that announcement, and I assure him now that if it is physically possible the minority will make every effort to be ready by tomorrow noon. In the event the minority does not make its realinement then, I ask the membership to note now that there will be a session on Friday. It is very necessary that the committee assignments be made and the legislative committees organized so as to consider immediately the bills which are introduced.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I hope that the suggestion of a session on Friday will not operate automatically to retard action by the other side.

DEMOCRATIZING CONGRESSIONAL PROCEDURES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD an address which I delivered on the subject, Democratizing Congressional Procedures, before the Association of American Law Schools at Cincinnati, Ohio, December 28, 1948.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEMOCRATIZING CONGRESSIONAL PROCEDURES

(Address by WAYNE MORSE, United States Senator from Oregon, before the Association of American Law Schools, December 28, 1948, Cincinnati, Ohio)

Political scientists have long been concerned about the intricacies of parliamentary procedure in the Congress of the United States and the opportunities presented for obstructionist tactics. Students of politics have discussed and written at some length concerning various proposals for liberalizing these procedures so that majority sentiment in the Senate and the House may be expressed by votes on proposed legislation. The problem should rightly concern lawyers and teachers of law as well, because it goes to the heart of the democratic process.

With particular reference to the Senate rules permitting unlimited debate, former Vice President Dawes said these rules put into the hands of individuals and minorities at times a power greater than the veto power given by the Constitution to the President. Dr. George B. Galloway, in his informative and very excellent and readable book, Congress at the Crossroads, in a sentence succinctly describes the hazards flowing from minority rule in making our national laws. "There are," he says, "many points on the legislative highways and byways where a few legislators can lurk, like the pirates of Tripoli, and take toll of the passing traffic."

In recent years some significant efforts have been made in the campaign to modernize our National Legislature and make it a stronger instrument of representative government. The Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is an outstanding example.

However, it should be remembered that the Reorganization Act of 1946 did not deal in any respect with the parliamentary rules of either the House or the Senate, but only with such organizational matters as a consolidation of committees, the organization of committee staffs, the designation of standing committees, the status of special committees, and the salaries of Members of Congress.

The failure in 1946 of the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress to make specific recommendations covering changes in the rules was not an oversight on the part of the committee. The limitation of the jurisdiction of the committee specifically denied it any authority to make recommendations for changes in the rules of either the House or of the Senate. This limitation of the jurisdiction of the committee was the price which was exacted by the Congress as a whole before it would agree to the resolution authorizing the creation of a joint committee to conduct a study and make recommendations on the problems of reorganizing the Congress.

The incident shows how difficult it is to obtain any consideration by the Congress itself of any proposals for pruning some of its bewhiskered Rip Van Winkle rules.

I do not wish to minimize the accomplishments of the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress. Under the chairmanship of the then senior Senator from Wisconsin, Robert M. La Follette, Jr., it accomplished much good by way of streamlining the chassis of Congress. However, the engine is still of model T vintage and is in need of a complete overhauling—or better still, a new engineering design.

Nevertheless, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 was a very good beginning on the job of reorganizing the Congress, which sorely needs to be completed.

On the eve of the convening of the Eighty-first Congress, the movement for further congressional reform is gaining momentum. The interest of the general public in proposals for reform of the procedures of the Congress is making some dent upon the politicians. The last election will undoubtedly have its effects—at least on those Members of Congress who come from districts where a two-party system makes a real contest out of a political campaign by forcing candidates for office to take "yes" or "no" positions on issues raised by the electorate.

It is to be hoped that the results of the last election will cause those Members of the Congress who heretofore have seemed to take the position that the rules of the Congress are the business of the Congress and not of the people, to wake up to the political fact that the American people are rapidly coming to understand that in a very real sense their substantive legislative rights, which they hope to gain through the Congress, are determined in a large measure by their procedural rights now existing under the archaic rules of the Congress.

There is much evidence flowing from the public forums across America that the people of this country are putting a finger of protest on the rules of the Congress. They are calling the attention of the politician to the fact that the rules of the Congress too frequently deny to the people as a whole their legislative rights in accordance with the great democratic principle of majority rule.

The politicians had better give heed, before it is too late, to this growing demand for a revision of the rules of the Congress in the interest of democratizing the Congress, because the American people—once convinced of an existing injustice—can be counted upon to deal at the ballot boxes with politicians responsible for a do-nothing attitude in this regard.

It is a safe prediction to suggest that in the Eighty-first Congress a series of proposals for reform of the rules of Congress will be offered.

On the House side we have the proposal of Congressman EBERHARTER, of Pennsylvania, to be offered on the opening day, which would deprive the House Rules Committee of "its broad powers to block consideration of, or to demand changes in, legislation" and confine it to what he and many others regard as its proper role—"a traffic director on the legislative highway."

Also, the American Civil Liberties Union and the bill of rights committee of the Association of the Bar of the City of New York have recommended reforms in the standards of congressional investigating committees which would provide greater protection and fairer treatment for witnesses and for persons whose names are brought into testimony before these committees.

Various groups interested in obtaining favorable consideration of civil-rights legislation are active in formulating suggestions designed to liberalize House and Senate rules which in the past have been so successfully used by the minority of legislators unalterably opposed to civil-rights proposals.

Among the many devices used to block legislation are the filibuster in the Senate and the autocratic power of the House Rules Committee. The seniority system of selecting committee chairmen also has a close relationship to any moves to democratize congressional procedures. I should like to discuss these institutions and some of the proposals for reforming them. Finally, I think it definitely worth while to consider what needs to be done by way of adopting a code of fair procedure for congressional investigating committees.

THE FILIBUSTER

Under the present rules of the Senate—which have not been changed in this respect for 30 years—it is possible for a third plus one of the Senators to block any attempt to limit debate, since petitions to invoke cloture require the support of two-thirds of the Senators voting. Moreover, cloture may be invoked only with respect to a "pending measure," a term which does not encompass many matters. The history of the Senate affords many examples of the extreme difficulty of obtaining affirmative action on such a petition even if an overwhelming majority of the Members are in favor of bringing an issue to a vote.

In 1917, following President Wilson's denunciation of the filibuster which defeated the armed ship bill, the Senate adopted rule 22, providing for closing debate upon motion signed by 16 Senators and adopted by two-thirds vote. The extreme difficulty of obtaining the required two-thirds majority is shown by an analysis of cloture petitions since 1917.

In the intervening 30 years 19 petitions have been filed. Only 4 obtained the necessary two-thirds majority; 7 received a majority of the entire membership; 12 received a simple majority of those present and voting; 6 obtained a minority of those present and voting; and 1 resulted in a tie vote. It is apparent, therefore, that the purpose of the committee that drafted the rule—to terminate successful filibustering—has not been realized.

Since 1917 at least a score of resolutions have been introduced in the Senate, in varying ways proposing limitations on debate. Many of these resolutions got no further than being referred to committee. In 1947 the Senate Rules and Administration Committee reported favorably a resolution, the principal feature of which was to permit a cloture motion to be laid before the Senate and not avoided by such parliamentary stratagems as amending the Journal, or raising other highly privileged matters. No change was proposed in the two-thirds voting requirement. However, the Senate took no further action, and it is obvious that the effort to obtain reformation of the cloture rule will have to be renewed in the Eighty-first Congress which convenes next week.

The time to reform the rules of the Senate to eliminate the filibuster is at the beginning of the session. On the first day of the next Congress all Senators who believe in the establishment of majority rule in the Senate should support an amendment to the rules aimed at preventing any future filibusters. There is little doubt, of course, that adoption of such a proposal will be vigorously resisted. It is equally clear that protagonists of obstruction will wage a last-ditch fight against antifilibuster legislation itself with their customary weapon, the filibuster. However, a filibuster can be defeated. The FEPC filibuster in the Seventy-ninth Congress could have been broken if a serious attempt to do so had been made.

At that time the Democratic majority in the Senate, supported by many Republicans, recessed the Senate between 4 and 6 o'clock each afternoon during the filibuster, and on Friday afternoons recessed until each following Monday at noon. The Democratic administration made public statements in support of the FEPC, but took no effective action against the filibuster. No Democratic Senator and only a few Republican Senators were willing to join in my suggestion at that time to hold the Senate in continuous session for 24 hours a day for as many days, weeks, and months as might be necessary to break the obstructionist tactics. An opportunity to establish, once and for all, majority rule in the Senate was passed up. It should not happen again.

For 3 weeks in January and February 1946, the technical issue before the Senate was the correction of the Journal, an issue against which a cloture motion could not be brought because of the ruling that a motion to correct the Journal was not a "pending measure" within the meaning of the cloture rule.

For several days during the special session last summer the Senate debated the motion to take up the anti-poll-tax bill. A cloture petition was presented, but the Presiding Officer, Senator VANDENBERG, upheld a point of order against the petition, pointing out that the term "pending measure" as used in the rule and as interpreted in the past cannot reasonably be construed to include a motion. In support of his ruling, he adverted to the fact that "numerous resolutions have been submitted from time to time having for their purpose an amendment of the rule so as to give a privileged status to a cloture motion, and expressly making its presentation in order at any time upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business."

There is no doubt that Senator VANDENBERG was entirely correct in his ruling, in light of binding precedents which have been handed down by preceding Presiding Officers who have been called upon to interpret the meaning of the words "pending measure" in existing rule 22. The answer to the problem is the one recommended by Senator VANDENBERG at a meeting of the Republican conference last July, when he suggested that rule 22 itself must be amended so that the words "pending measure" shall include any item of business pending before the Senate.

There has been some suggestion that Senator BARKLEY, who will be the Presiding Officer after January 20, may reverse the Vandenberg ruling. Apparently support for this view is found in Senator BARKLEY's statement last summer, in which he urged that cloture be applied to the motion to consider the anti-poll-tax bill. He expressed the view that the object of the rule is to bring to a conclusion a discussion upon a pending matter, and if we cannot bring it to a conclusion upon the preliminary motions which may be regarded as measures toward that end, then the effectiveness of the rule is completely destroyed, and the object of those who wrote it and adopted it has been completely defeated.

It is impossible to know how Senator BARKLEY will rule if a similar issue is presented to him. However, it is suggested that a reversal of Senator VANDENBERG's ruling would not materially help the cause of keeping debate within reasonable bounds, because it could be reversed by another presiding officer, while the fundamental reform needed might well lose some momentum.

It is obvious therefore that the cloture rule, in order to be effective, must be amended so as to apply to any motion, measure or pending matter. That is what has been proposed in the resolution reported by the Rules Committee.

On the questions of how large a majority should be required to impose cloture and how much time should be allowed for debate thereafter, opinions differ among proponents of reform. The Senate committee resolution leaves both matters as they are today—a two-thirds majority of those voting is necessary, and each Senator is entitled to speak an hour.

As experience with the present rules shows, a two-thirds vote has been mustered on only 4 out of 19 occasions, and only 7 petitions obtained a majority of the entire membership. However, if the rule required only a majority of those voting, as is the case with all legislation except treaties or measures proposed to be passed over the President's veto, 12 of the 19 cloture petitions would have passed. If we bear in mind that it is the imperative duty of a legislative body not only to debate but to legislate, it would seem clear that no greater majority should be required to close debate, once there has been adequate discussion, than to enact a measure.

It is very important that adequate time be given for Members to debate the merits of an issue after cloture. My resolution proposes that 2 hours be allowed each Senator after cloture, with the right to farm out all or part of his time; in round numbers this conceivably would give 8 days of debate if necessary. However, we all know that, once the Senate has adopted a rule fixing a time definite and certain for a vote, there is no serious danger of consuming the maximum time just for the sake of filibustering. Nevertheless, adequate time for debate—erring, if at all, on the side of lengthy debate—is an essential safeguard to the people's interests, for there have been many instances where a full Senate debate prevented the enactment of very unsound legislation.

A valid and obvious distinction must be drawn between a filibuster, the purpose of which is to prevent a measure from ever coming to a vote, and a debate which seeks only to delay a vote for a reasonable length of time. The first type is a filibuster, pure and simple, and the possibility of its recurrence must be eliminated by changing the rules of the United States Senate. The second type, prolonged debate but technically not a filibuster, will never occur if the cloture rule is amended so as to guarantee the minority in the Senate a reasonable time limit after cloture in which to present its point of view in an endeavor to try to change itself from a minority to a majority.

If majority rule is to characterize the procedures of Congress, the voters of this country must make that clear to their representatives. Either we are going to reestablish the principle of majority rule in our Congress or we are going to continue to drift into government by minority interests and bloc pressures. The issue so framed furnishes another test of liberalism versus reactionism.

It is important that the American people recognize that our form of government can protect their rights only so long as they keep it strong and effective. Representative government is not a machine that works automatically. It is but a set of rules and principles which the people by their own consent have decreed shall be binding upon their own conduct. These principles cannot work unless they are administered by men and women responsive to the will of the voters who elected them.

The people must be ever watchful against institutions, like the filibuster, which permit the perversion of free government by self-seeking men. If the people relax their vigilance, they may lose the fruits of democracy which promote the greatest good for the greatest number within the framework of our private-property economy.

An example of the need for a rule which will permit the minority adequate time to debate proposals for unsound legislation, and make the necessary attempt to win enough votes through debate to convert themselves into the majority, can be easily illustrated.

In 1945 President Roosevelt proposed that workers be drafted into industry and moved from place to place across the country. Under this proposed bill the War Manpower Commission was to be given the power to assign workers to work for private industry under the direction and for the profit of private employers. A few of us in the Senate led the fight against that proposal and blocked an attempt on the part of the majority leader to force an early vote on the issue. When we announced that we would debate the issue for a week, the majority leader good-naturedly advised us that he would try to force the vote immediately because at that time he felt he had us beaten by eight votes. However, we did discuss the issue for a week and when the final vote was taken our view prevailed by a substantial number of votes. Thus, a reasonably short period of debate prevented the passage of a piece of legislation which threatened some basic principles of freedom.

Our success in this instance can be attributed to two main factors. First, the delay in the vote gave the people throughout the country time to react to the proposal for a draft of men into industry, and once they came to appreciate the threat to the principles of freedom which were involved, they made their objections known to the Members of Congress. In the second place, the debate itself had a great influence on some legislators who at first blush and without serious consideration had been enticed by the plausibility of this proposal. A scanning of the speeches made in that week's debate will show that the lawyers in the Senate did some very effective work in pointing out the constitutional weaknesses of the industry manpower draft proposal even in time of war.

The primary reason why the fight to pass an antifilibuster resolution should be waged at the beginning of the next Congress is that if the resolution is followed by a filibuster—as it undoubtedly would be—it will not hold up any other legislation, since none will be ready for Senate action. It would be very difficult to break a filibuster near the close of a session, because the unity of action required on the part of Senators is difficult to obtain when so many of them are anxious to recess and go home. It is likewise difficult to wage a successful fight against a filibuster in the middle of a session, since the argument is always made that taking the time to defeat a filibuster blocks action on other legislation vital to the welfare of the country.

The time is near for a major effort to secure majority rule in the Senate. Unfortunately, it may develop into a test of physical endurance, and on the surface it may seem an undignified and dramatic struggle. But it is a fight that must be made, or else representative government will continue to be perverted to undemocratic ends, and the promises of political and economic democracy will remain an empty mirage for millions of American people.

THE HOUSE RULES COMMITTEE

The House, unlike the Senate, does not permit unlimited debate. However, by reason of the powers that it has assumed, the Rules Committee effectively keeps bills favorably reported by the appropriate legislative committees from reaching the floor, or gives them clearance only on such terms as satisfy the members of the Rules Committee.

The criticism frequently heard is that the Rules Committee, while supposed only to control procedure in considering legislation, increasingly injects itself into the merits of measures and substitutes its judgment for that of legislative committees and not infrequently the desires of a majority in the House.

One of the most glaring instances of usurpation of power by the Rules Committee occurred 2 years ago, when it took the extraordinary step of substituting the Case bill for the labor relations measure drawn by the House Labor Committee. The Committee on Rules, dissatisfied with the Labor Committee's labor bill, refused to give it clearance and instead substituted the Case bill which had been introduced only 2 days before and had not even been considered by the Legislative Committee. This action was vigorously denounced by both the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee.

For many years the Rules Committee has followed the practice of insisting upon changes in legislation reported by other committees, as a condition of sending the bills to the floor of the House. In the second session of the Eightieth Congress the committee's action on the housing bill brought strong protests. The committee required elimination from the housing measure of provisions for public housing and slum clearance before it would grant a rule permitting House consideration, and then the rule forbade the offering of amendments on the floor of the House. Senator TOBEY condemned these tactics as thwarting "the will of the Senate and of the House committee and of the people of the country," and warned that if allowed to continue "the democratic processes will have gone by the wind."

On another occasion the Rules Committee refused to allow a vote on the administration-backed universal military training bill, although it had been favorably reported by the Armed Services Committee. After heavy pressure had been brought to bear on the House leadership, the Rules Committee granted a special rule for the Armed Services Committee's bill to revive the Selective Service System. Former Supreme Court Justice Roberts characterized the committee's obstructionists tactics in this instance as "a travesty on the American system of representative government."

What steps can be taken to trim the dictatorial powers of the Rules Committee? One of the first items of business when the new Congress convenes is the consideration of the standard resolution that the House adopt the rules of the previous Congress. At this point the way is open for the proponents of reform, because amendments to the rules can be adopted by a simple majority vote without reference to the Rules Committee.

Representative EBERHARTER has written all Members of the Eighty-first Congress soliciting their support for such a move. Press accounts report that he has received impressive backing. It is to be hoped that during the brief period available, he and his colleagues will seize the golden opportunity to strike a blow for democratic procedure and majority rule.

THE SENIORITY SYSTEM

For a hundred years the prevailing custom in the Senate has been to select committee chairmen and make assignments on committees according to the principle of seniority in point of service. The same rule has been in vogue in the House since 1910.

The seniority rule ignores all other qualifications except the accident of tenure. Inevitably, the result is that chairmanships of major committees go to Members representing safe districts, who may be wholly out of sympathy with the most recent expression of the electorate in the country as a whole.

Defenders of the seniority system argue that the automatic method settles harmoniously the selection of chairmen, avoiding factional fights, logrolling, and political trading. Doubtless this method results in greater contentment and less danger to morale—for those high on the seniority roster—but the question may well be asked whether this device is likely to promote responsibility in office and responsiveness to the wishes of the people.

Business would be shocked if advancement to higher and more responsible positions in industry were governed solely by length of service. The usual response to such a suggestion in labor-management relations is that the principle of seniority, while entitled to weight, leads to mediocrity if rigidly followed. Congressmen are fond of criticizing the application of this rule in Government bureaus, rightly pointing out that it stifles the promotion of more able but younger men. In my judgment, a case for ignoring these and other arguments against slavish adherence to seniority in the legislative branch of our Government has not been made.

There are times when the rule of seniority is ignored by the respective political party organizations within the Congress, particularly when the leaders of the party organization wish to discipline a Member of the Senate or of the House who seeks to exercise an honest independence of judgment on the merits of issues irrespective of the recommendations of the party policy makers.

In the Republican Party, liberal Republican Senators from time immemorial have felt the whiplash of party discipline inflicted in the form of denying them their rights, under the seniority rule, to important committees and other assignments within the Congress. On this point your speaker knows whereof he speaks.

Since the considered judgment of most students and critics of the congressional committee system is that the seniority custom ought to be abolished, what better alternative methods can be suggested?

With respect to assignments to membership on standing committees, it has been suggested by Senator White, who is qualified to speak from a lifetime of experience in Congress, that these committees should be composed of men representing both the principal sections of the country and the chief interests affected by legislation within the jurisdiction of the committee. In addition, it has been proposed that recent changes in public opinion would be reflected if assignments were made in proportion to the division of the membership into length-of-service brackets.

Thus, if in the House 25 percent of the membership are first-termers, the composition of each standing committee would be one-fourth first-termers. Under this formula the balance of the committee assignments would be divided in proportion between second-termers and those who have served three terms or longer. The result would be more equitable representation of the country as a whole and the sentiment of the electorate.

As to the selection of committee chairmen—who should, of course, meet the tests of ability, loyalty to national rather than sectional interests, and party responsibility—a great many suggestions have been made. Those which seem most likely to meet the foregoing tests are selection by party caucus, by the committee on committees, and by the presiding officer or majority leader.

Of these three methods, the party caucus is probably the least desirable, because of the size of the selecting body and the opportunities it affords for electioneering and log-rolling. Other devices, such as election of committee chairmen by committee members or from the floor, or by seniority, do not satisfy the important test of party responsibility.

It would seem that a fair balancing of all the interests involved would be accomplished best by the following suggested procedure for the selection of personnel of Senate committees, including the selection of committee chairmen.

The rules should provide for the election of the committee on committees of each party in the Senate by a majority vote of the respective party caucus or conference, which committee on committees would make nominations for committee membership. These nominations should be submitted to a full party caucus or conference with the right of any member of the conference to make additional nominations from the floor, the full conference by a majority vote then passing final judgment on the membership of each committee. The chairman of each committee then would be elected by a majority vote of the full committee after each party has designated its party representatives on each committee.

It is to be noted that by democratizing the selection of members and chairmen of committees in this fashion the result could conceivably be the election of a member of the minority party as chairman of a committee, if in the opinion of his colleagues on a committee his qualifications and their confidence in his nonpartisanship and statesmanship were such as to cause them to want to entrust him with the leadership of the committee.

As a practical matter, there would be few if any instances where anyone but a member of the majority party would be selected as chairman. However, it would be salutary to have a rule which would permit of a full operation of democratic procedures in the selection of committee chairmen, irrespective of partisan lines.

It is true that such a suggested procedure might occasionally result in some loss of party responsibility. However, the instances in which a chairman of a committee would be selected from the minority party would be so rare and exceptional that no great damage to party responsibility could be envisioned by such a rule.

On the other hand, the existence of such a rule which would permit of the selection of the individual considered by his colleagues on the committee as the best qualified to carry on the work of chairmanship of a committee would provide a healthy reassurance to the American people that the rules of the Senate as to committee assignments subordinate narrow partisanship to the public interest.

Of course, a necessary corollary to such a proposed rule would be an additional rule providing that the procedures, appointment of committee personnel, setting of hearings, and the conduct of all the business of a committee of the Senate shall be by a majority vote of the committee members. A chairman of a Senate committee should be required by the rules to function as a presiding officer of the committee and as a servant of the members of the committee—not their master.

Under existing practices and traditions in the Senate, committee chairmen over the years have acquired broad and sweeping administrative authority over the business and affairs of committees, so that in many respects they exercise almost dictatorial powers. If the committee procedures of the Senate are to be democratized as they should be in the interest of conducting the people's legislative business in an efficient manner, then the present practices of committee chairmen must be drastically revised by the adoption of rules of procedure which give to the full committee, through the operation of the majority-vote principle, full and complete authority over the business of the committee, leaving to the chairman the primary responsibility of administering those policies.

It is not very difficult to predict what will happen to the seniority rule in the Eighty-first Congress. The safe answer is "Absolutely nothing." However, there is growing discussion throughout the country of the need for a change in the seniority rule; and it is equally safe to predict that the demand for a change in the rules of Congress, including the rule of seniority, will not abate until Congress does something about the rules. In the meantime, democratic action at the ballot boxes will register its effect on those candidates for reelection who continue to take the position that the status quo should be preserved.

Political commentators have pointed out that if the seniority rule is followed in the new Congress, the likelihood is that some of the pledges in the Democratic Party platform will not receive sympathetic treatment from committee chairmen.

PROCEDURES OF INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES

It is not an overstatement to say that some of the procedures pertaining to House and Senate investigations result in a denial of the basic principles of judicial process taught in American law schools.

The shameful record being made by some congressional investigating committees needs no elaboration; it is painfully apparent to anyone who can read the daily papers. Witnesses, who for all practical purposes though not in strictly legal terms, are on trial, have been denied or closely restricted in their right to counsel. They have little or no right to question their accusers or examine the evidence on which they are brought to trial. Lurid charges and broad hints of sensational developments are aired in press conferences to the irreparable injury of individuals and to the utter shame of the Congress and the country. It is no answer to offer the accused—and even this is not always done—the opportunity later to deny the charges. As one witness recently observed, the sad truth is that denials seldom catch up with accusations.

Some of the hearings of congressional committees are in the class of "kangaroo court" procedure and certainly many of them do not give to a free American citizen, called before the committee, the basic judicial protection afforded in a police court. The committee conducting the investigation into Communist and subversive activities in our Government is a notorious example. While I firmly believe that Congress should investigate these and other matters and ferret out those working to destroy the American Government, I deplore the procedures being used.

As a lawyer, my confidence in the American judicial system is so complete that I know we can find whatever facts exist without ignoring the safeguards of the American judicial process which should be available to any accused person, the innocent as well as the guilty. Of course, legislative inquiries cannot be conducted in all respects as judicial trials, but I know of no reason why congressional investigations and hearings cannot be conducted with decorum and in complete compliance with those basic and fundamental protections of the American judicial process prevailing in the courts.

Much of the criticism of the House Un-American Activities Committee is sound, not only because the committee has failed to observe basic principles of fair procedure but also because it has so obviously engaged in political dramatics and sensationalism of the crudest sort. Even though realism teaches that politicians must pay some attention to public relations and to keeping the public informed, they ought to perform this function with dignity and in a manner which is calculated to educate the public as to the facts involved rather than to arouse public prejudice and partisanship.

Perhaps the most arresting statement coming from this committee was the remark of the chairman correctly summarizing the rights of witnesses before the committee. He said to a lawyer who protested being ordered to take the stand without benefit of counsel: "The rights you have are the rights given you by this committee. We will determine what rights you have got and what rights you have not got before this committee."

If further evidence were needed of the fact that reform in procedure is long overdue, the new low reached by the Un-American Activities Committee in the Duggan case should persuade even the die-hard defenders of the committee. This shocking exhibition of headline hunting compels agreements with the observation in the Washington Post editorial last Friday that committee proposals for self-reform must be viewed in a new perspective.

Just as the Congress adopted the Administrative Procedure Act so as to establish uniformity in the procedure and hearings of administrative agencies, so each House should enact over-all rules or a code of fair procedure to guide its committees. Proposals such as those advanced by the American Civil Liberties Union and by the New York City Bar Association committee have real merit. Of course there are minor differences, but the objective and the substantive suggestions are about the same. Any code of fair procedure should embrace the following points:

1. Before hearings are commenced, the subject of the investigation should be clearly stated, and the evidence elicited should be relevant

2. Witnesses should have the right to counsel, who would be allowed to advise his client while testifying.

3. The right to supplement testimony by oral or written statements, confined to relevant matters, should be accorded witnesses.

4. Accurate stenographic records of testimony should be kept of all testimony, whether given in public or executive session, and inspection allowed by the witness or his counsel. Copies of the transcript of public sessions should be furnished if requested, and in the case of executive sessions, it should be made available if later referred to in public session.

5. Persons mentioned or specifically identified in a public hearing should be afforded certain privileges before the committee or any member or employee comments adversely. Among these privileges should be the right to file a sworn statement, to be made a part of the record; the right to appear and testify; the right to limited cross-examination of witnesses whose testimony has adversely affected him; and the right to call, in the discretion of a majority of the committee, a reasonable number of witnesses in his own behalf.

6. No committee report should be issued except on adequate notice and with the approval of a majority of the committee.

An interesting suggestion of the New York City Bar Association committee is that no photographs, motion pictures, television or radio broadcasting of the proceedings be permitted while any witness is testifying. Much can be said for this proposal, for it is questionable whether the dispassionate search for the truth is materially aided by a battery of network microphones, klieg lights, and an imposing array of television and motion picture cameras.

The power of the Congress of the United States to conduct investigations should not be curtailed, because the investigative power of the Congress is one of our most effective checks against governmental abuses and one of our most valuable aids in finding the factual basis for needed legislation. It is only the procedures of congressional investigations that need to be subjected to careful surveillance in the interest of protecting the individual citizen from abusive practices of the Congress itself.

Under our system of checks and balances we must always be alert to the danger that any agency of Government, including the Congress itself, may, through the men in charge of its affairs, at any given time substitute caprice and arbitrary discretion for government through law.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, this address which I delivered in Cincinnati deals in its major part with the subject matter of a resolution which seeks to outlaw the filibuster from the floor of the United States Senate. Briefly, that resolution, which I have in my hand, requires that after a cloture petition has been signed by 16 Senators and presented to the Senate, then, by a majority vote, it can be agreed to. This is urged because if we are to deal with the whole question of majority rule in the Senate of the United States, let us get back to the simple procedure of the majority vote.

The second major provision of my antifilibuster resolution is one which guarantees to each Member of the Senate, after cloture has been approved, a maximum of 2 hours to discuss the merits of the issue involved in the legislation in regard to which cloture has been invoked, with the right to farm out all or part of that time.

Mr. President, as the Members of this body have heard me say before, I think it of utmost importance, as we seek to eliminate the filibuster from the Senate, that we adopt a rule which will guarantee to the minority in this body ample opportunity to make their case on the merits of any issue.

The Senate will recall that in the fight on the President's veto message on the Taft-Hartley bill, the junior Senator from Oregon objected to the effort to force a vote on that veto message on the afternoon it came in, or on the succeeding afternoon, as the attempt was made by the leadership on my side of the aisle, by means of a unanimous-consent request. I took the position at that time that the vote should not occur prior to Monday afternoon at 3 o'clock in order that Senators might then have the reaction of the country to the President's message. It should be observed that the time suggested for voting—3 o'clock Monday afternoon—was the soonest that a vote could have been taken, even under a cloture situation, if no Senator had wished to make use of the 1 hour debate provision under the existing cloture rule.

Mr. President, in the cloture amendment which I am offering, each Senator is allowed 2 hours, which, in round numbers, if all Senators desire to use their time, or farm out the time so that the total time would be used, would mean a maximum debate of eight full days. As I pointed out in my Cincinnati speech, it is very important that, on the great issues over which filibusters usually start, the people be given ample opportunity to make their position known. I recall distinctly the situation in 1945 when President Roosevelt sent to the Congress a proposal to draft free workers into industry, under the jurisdiction and power of the Manpower Commission. American workers would have been compelled to labor for private employers, for their profit dollar, and obliged to go wherever that Commission should decide to send them—all in the name of prosecuting the war. That bill passed the House after very short debate, but when it came to the Senate there were some of us who stood up in opposition to that proposal of President Roosevelt because we thought it challenged and jeopardized some basic rights of freedom.

The distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] notified us on a Tuesday that he hoped to obtain a vote on that measure by Wednesday or Thursday, and with equal good nature we said to the distinguished majority leader, "You are not going to get a vote on this measure for another week." He laughed and said, "What are you fellows going to do—filibuster?" We said, "No, but we are going to talk at length on the merits and demerits of this proposal." He said, "We have you beat by eight votes." We replied to him, "Yes, you have us beat by eight votes today, but you will not have us beat by eight votes a week from today, when we let this matter go to a vote."

If one will go back and check the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that week, he will find it very interesting to note that a series of very able speeches on the merits and demerits of that proposal of the President of the United States filled the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. When we voted a week later we defeated the bill in the Senate, and thereby protected, in my judgment, some basic freedoms which that bill would have jeopardized.

I make that point, Mr. President, because I think it is of the utmost importance that we see to it that when we adopt a rule of procedure in the Senate by way of a modification of the cloture rule, we see to it that the new rule guarantees to the minority ample time to discuss the merits of the issue, and gives to the people of the country ample time to be heard from before a vote is forced through the Senate.

Our job of statesmanship in this matter is one of trying to strike that delicate balance between guaranteeing that the elected representatives of the people shall follow the majority vote rule in the Senate, and at the same time give to the minority a reasonable amount of time to try to change themselves into a majority.

Thus, under the amendment I offer, Mr. President, I propose that cloture shall be adopted by a majority vote, in contrast to the two-thirds vote provided for in the proposal offered by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], and that after cloture has been adopted by a majority vote, then 2 hours shall be allowed each Senator to debate the issue, with the right to farm out all or a part of his time.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. Not until I finish my remarks. Then I shall be glad to yield.

The third provision of my proposed amendment to the rules is that cloture shall be applicable to all items of business, irrespective of the present provisions of rule III and rule VI or any other rule, so that never again will we present to the country the spectacle of filibustering for some 14 days on the question whether or not the Chaplain's prayer should be included in the daily Journal.

Mr. President, I think we can start out the Eighty-first Congress by making a clear record for putting into practice the principles of majority rule in the Senate, by this afternoon adopting the amendment to the rules which I offer.

Therefore, Mr. President, I send to the desk the resolution I propose, and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LUCAS in the chair). The clerk will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 12), as follows:

Resolved, That subsection 2 of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, relating to cloture, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"If at any time, notwithstanding the provisions of rule III or rule VI or any other rule of the Senate, a motion, signed by 16 Senators, to bring to a close the debate upon any measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, is presented to the Senate, the Presiding Officer shall at once state the motion to the Senate, and 1 hour after the Senate meets on the following calendar day but one, he shall lay the motion before the Senate and direct that the Secretary call the roll, and upon the ascertainment that a quorum is present, the Presiding Officer shall, without debate, submit to the Senate by a yea-and-nay vote the question:

"'Is it the sense of the Senate that the debate shall be brought to a close?'

"And if that question shall be decided in the affirmative by a majority vote of those voting, then said measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, shall be the unfinished business to the exclusion of all other business until disposed of.

"Thereafter no Senator shall be entitled to speak in all more than 2 hours on the measure, motion, or other matter pending before the Senate, or the unfinished business, the amendments thereto, and motions affecting the same; except that any Senator may yield to any other Senator all or any part of the aggregate period of time which he is entitled to speak; and the Senator to whom he so yields may speak for the time so yielded in addition to any period of time which he is entitled to speak in his own right. It shall be the duty of the Presiding Officer to keep the time of each Senator who speaks. Except by unanimous consent, no amendment shall be in order after the vote to bring the debate to a close, unless the same has been presented and read prior to that time. No dilatory motion, or dilatory amendment, or amendment not germane shall be in order. Points of order, including questions of relevancy, and appeals from the decision of the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon requests unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution just read at the desk. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I am not familiar with all the details of the resolution which the distinguished Senator has proposed. I know it seeks to amend the rules of the Senate and limit debate.

However, I do know from observation the great ability of the Senator from Oregon to delay action by the Senate and postpone a vote on measures to which he is opposed. He is a past master of dilatory procedure. I therefore assume that the resolution he has been discussing, which he says is directed at filibusters, would give us a rule which would absolutely prevent extended speeches or discussions here in the Senate. If there is any virtue in the old adage that it takes a thief to catch a thief, the Senator from Oregon can draw a resolution which would virtually prohibit discussion in the Senate to the extent that no Member could even explain a bill at any length.

Mr. President, the Senate of the United States is a great institution which has been able to function for more than 150 years under the existing rules. Through times of peace and many wars it has never failed the American people. It is true that ofttimes the Senate is irritated and annoyed by lengthy speeches. I myself have felt that irritation.

But, Mr. President, when we look down the vista of the years which encompass our history, we do not find a single occasion where material damage has been done to the interests of the Nation or to the people through the operation of the rules assuring free and full discussion to every Member of this body. The present rule has prevented much more harm than it has worked.

Under the rules of this body we have acquired the proud title of the greatest deliberative body on earth. Under our existing rules the Senate of the United States stands as the last citadel of free and full discussion where the rights of the minority can be heard and fully protected. We alone among all the parliamentary bodies of the earth may speak fully and freely and bring to the attention of the American people vices in measures which are not readily apparent, which the majority gloss over, and which are not brought to light by the press or radio.

Mr. President, I shall not belabor this question at this time. I assume from what has been said here today that it is likely to be discussed at length in the future. I do know that this matter is of too much gravity to the future of our Nation, the freedoms of our people, and the rights of minorities and of the States to be considered in this manner and adopted in such shotgun fashion. Nothing more important than amendments to the rules which have heretofore guided the Senate will be before us at this session. I am, therefore, compelled to insist upon the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard, and the resolution will go over for a day under the rule.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Oregon whether the proposed 2-hour limitation contained in his resolution applies only to the bill itself which may be under discussion, or does it also include any amendments which may be pending at the time or which may be offered to the measure?

Mr. MORSE. It applies to the matter to which the cloture petition is directed. It means that once the cloture petition is adopted each Senator shall have not more than 2 hours to debate the entire matter before it comes to a vote.

Mr. LANGER. That includes amendments also?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. President, I wish to say that the reply made by my good friend, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], in no way surprises me. I expected it to be in just about the form in which I heard it. I think I have demonstrated that I can talk at length on the floor of the Senate, if the occasion necessitates, when I am fighting for the minority. But I think that even the junior Senator from Oregon, and I am certain the distinguished Senator from Georgia, ought to be required to work under a rule that at least limits them to 2 hours' discussion after cloture has been invoked.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Oregon yield to me?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. RUSSELL. If the resolution offered by the Senator from Oregon should be adopted it would prevent any Senator in the future from challenging his record for long-distance speaking on the floor of the Senate. If his resolution should be adopted by the Senate it would enable him to retire with the championship. No other Senator could ever even seek the laurels which he now so deservedly wears.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, inasmuch as other measures dealing with the same subject have been submitted today and have gone to the Committee on Rules and Administration, it seems to me appropriate that the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon should take the same course. Has the Senator from Oregon any objection to his resolution taking the same course?

Mr. MORSE. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution submitted by the Senator from Oregon is referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. BARKLEY. If there is nothing further to be brought before the Senate at this time, I move that the Senate adjourn until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, January 6, 1949, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 5, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thou who art infinite in love and mercy and power, we humbly wait in Thy holy presence. We pray that neither by word nor deed may we ever defile the image with which Thou hast endowed us.

In this fear-haunted world, do Thou give us light in our blindness, that by a wise and deeper understanding of our high calling we may rise above selfish joys and selfish sorrows. Guided by a higher conception of our responsibility to our Republic, may we be keepers of Thy commandments, defenders of Thy law, and towers of strength in all Thy righteous ways.

Let Thy spirit attend our President, our Speaker, and all who labor here. We pray in our Redeemer's name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, January 3, 1949, was read and approved.

The SPEAKER. Members of the Congress, I have the distinguished honor of presenting to you the President of the United States.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDENT. Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, Members of the Congress, I am happy to report to this Eighty-first Congress that the state of the Union is good. [Applause.] Our Nation is better able than ever before to meet the needs of the American people and to give them their fair chance in the pursuit of happiness. It is foremost among the nations of the world in the search for peace. [Applause.]

During the last 16 years the American people have been creating a society which offers new opportunities for every man to enjoy his share of the good things of life.

In this society we are conservative about the values and principles which we cherish; but we are forward-looking in protecting those values and principles and in extending their benefits. We have rejected the discredited theory that the fortunes of the Nation should be in the hands of a privileged few. [Applause.] We have abandoned the "trickle down" concept of national prosperity. Instead, we believe that our economic system should rest on a democratic foundation and that wealth should be created for the benefit of all. [Applause.]

The recent election shows that the American people are in favor of this kind of society and want to go on improving it. [Applause.]

The American people have decided that poverty is just as wasteful and just as unnecessary as preventable disease. We have pledged our common resources to help one another in the hazards and struggles of individual life. We believe that no unfair prejudice or artificial distinction should bar any citizen of the United States from an education, or from good health, or from a job that he is capable of performing. [Applause.]

The attainment of this kind of society demands the best efforts of every citizen in every walk of life, and it imposes increasing responsibilities on the Government.

The Government must work with industry, labor, and the farmers in keeping our economy running at full speed. The Government must see that every American has a chance to obtain his fair share of our increasing abundance. These responsibilities go hand in hand.

We cannot maintain prosperity unless we have a fair distribution of opportunity and a widespread consumption of the products of our factories and farms.

Our Government has undertaken to meet these responsibilities.

We have made tremendous public investments in highways, hydroelectric power projects, soil conservation and reclamation. We have established a system of social security. We have enacted laws protecting the rights and the welfare of our working people and the income of our farmers. These Federal policies have paid for themselves many times over. They have strengthened the material foundations of our democratic ideals. Without them, our present prosperity would be impossible.

Reinforced by these policies, our private enterprise system has reached new heights of production. Since the boom year of 1929, while our population has increased by only 20 percent, our agricultural production has increased by 45 percent, and our industrial production has increased by 75 percent. We are turning out far more goods and more wealth per worker than we have ever done before.

This progress has confounded the gloomy prophets—at home and abroad—who predicted the downfall of American capitalism. The people of the United States, going their own way, confident in their own powers, have achieved the greatest prosperity the world has ever seen. [Applause.]

But, great as our progress has been, we still have a long way to go.

As we look around the country, many of our shortcomings stand out in bold relief.

We are suffering from excessively high prices.

Our production is still not large enough to satisfy our demands.

Our minimum wages are far too low.

Small business is losing ground to growing monopoly.

Our farmers still face an uncertain future. And too many of them lack the benefits of our modern civilization.

Some of our natural resources are still being wasted.

We are acutely short of electric power, although the means for developing such power are abundant.

Five million families are still living in slums and firetraps. Three million families share their homes with others.

Our health is far behind the progress of medical science. Proper medical care is so expensive that it is out of reach of the great majority of our citizens.

Our schools, in many localities, are utterly inadequate.

Our democratic ideals are often thwarted by prejudice and intolerance.

Each of these shortcomings is also an opportunity—an opportunity for the Congress and the President to work for the good of the people.

Our first great opportunity is to protect our economy against the evils of "boom and bust."

This objective cannot be attained by Government alone. Indeed, the greater part of the task must be performed by individual efforts under our system of free enterprise. We can keep our present prosperity, and increase it, only if free enterprise and free government work together to that end.

We cannot afford to float along carelessly on a postwar boom until it collapses. And it is not enough merely to prepare to weather a recession if it comes. Instead Government and business must work together constantly to achieve more and more jobs and more and more production, which mean more and more prosperity for all the people.

The business cycle is man-made; and men of good will, working together, can smooth it out.

So far as business is concerned, it should plan for steady, vigorous expansion, seeking always to increase its output, lower its prices, and avoid the vices of monopoly and restriction. So long as business does this, it will be contributing to continued prosperity, and it will have the help and encouragement of the Government.

The Employment Act of 1946 pledges the Government to use all its resources to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power. This means that the Government is firmly committed to protect business and the people against the dangers of recession and against the evils of inflation. This means that the Government must adapt its plans and policies to meet changing circumstances.

At the present time, our prosperity is threatened by inflationary pressures at a number of critical points in our economy. The Government must be in a position to take effective action at these danger spots. To that end, I recommend that the Congress enact legislation for the following purposes:

First, to continue the power to control consumer credit and enlarge the power to control bank credit.

Second, to grant authority to regulate speculation on the commodity exchanges.

Third, to continue export control authority and to provide adequate machinery for its enforcement.

Fourth, to continue the priorities and allocation authority in the field of transportation.

Fifth, to authorize priorities and allocations for key materials in short supply.

Sixth, to extend and strengthen rent control.

Seventh, to provide stand-by authority to impose price ceilings for scarce commodities which basically affect essential industrial production or the cost of living, and to limit unjustified wage adjustments which would force a break in an established price ceiling.

Eighth, to authorize an immediate study of the adequacy of production facilities for materials in critically short supply, such as steel; and, if found necessary, to authorize Government loans for the expansion of production facilities to relieve such shortages, and furthermore to authorize the construction of such facilities directly if action by private industry fails to meet our needs.

The Economic Report, which I shall submit to the Congress shortly, will discuss in detail the economic background for these recommendations.

One of the most important factors in maintaining prosperity is the Government's fiscal policy. At this time, it is essential not only that the Federal budget be balanced, but also that there be a substantial surplus to reduce inflationary pressures [applause], and permit a sizable reduction in the national debt, which now stands at $252,000,000,000. [Applause.] I recommend, therefore, that the Congress enact new tax legislation to bring in an additional $4,000,000,000 of Government revenue. This should come principally from additional corporate taxes. A portion should come from revised estate and gift taxes. Consideration should be given to raising personal income-tax rates in the middle and upper brackets.

If we want to keep our economy running in high gear, we must be sure that every group has the incentive to make its full contribution to the national welfare. At present, the working men and women of the Nation are unfairly discriminated against by a statute that abridges their rights, curtails their constructive efforts, and hampers our system of free collective bargaining. That statute is the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947, sometimes called the Taft-Hartley Act.

That act should be repealed. [Applause.]

The Wagner Act should be reenacted. However, certain improvements, which I recommended to the Congress 2 years ago, are needed. Jurisdictional strikes and unjustifiable secondary boycotts should be prohibited. The use of economic force to decide issues arising out of the interpretation of existing contracts should be prevented. Without endangering our democratic freedoms, means should be provided for setting up machinery for preventing strikes in vital industries which affect the public interest. [Applause.]

The Department of Labor should be rebuilt and strengthened and those units properly belonging within that Department should be placed in it.

The health of our economy and its maintenance at high levels further require that the minimum wage fixed by law should be raised to at least 75 cents an hour. [Applause.]

If our free enterprise economy is to be strong and healthy, we must reinvigorate the forces of competition. We must assure small business the freedom and opportunity to grow and prosper. To this purpose, we should strengthen our antitrust laws by closing those loopholes that permit monopolistic mergers and consolidations. [Applause.]

Our national farm program should be improved—not only in the interest of the farmers but for the lasting prosperity of the whole Nation. Our goals should be abundant farm production and parity of income for agriculture. [Applause.] Standards of living on the farm should be just as good as anywhere else in the country.

Farm price supports are an essential part of our program to achieve these ends. Price supports should be used to prevent farm price declines which are out of line with general price levels, to facilitate adjustments in production to consumer demands and to promote good land use. Our price support legislation must be adapted to these objectives. The authority of the Commodity Credit Corporation to provide adequate storage space for crops should be restored. [Applause.]

Our program for farm prosperity should also seek to expand the domestic market for agricultural products, particularly among low-income groups, and to increase and stabilize foreign markets.

We should give special attention to extending modern conveniences and services to our farms. Rural electrification should be pushed forward. And in considering legislation relating to housing, education, health, and social security, special attention should be given to rural problems. [Applause.]

Our growing population and the expansion of our economy depend upon the wise management of our land, water, forest, and mineral wealth. In our present dynamic economy, the task of conservation is not to lock up our resources but to develop and improve them. Failure today to make the investments which are necessary to support our progress in the future would be false economy.

We must push forward with the development of our rivers for power, irrigation, navigation, and flood control. [Applause.] We should apply the lessons of our Tennessee Valley experience to our other great river basins. [Applause.]

I again recommend that action be taken by the Congress to approve the St. Lawrence seaway and power project. [Applause.]

This is about the fifth time I have recommended it.

We must adopt a program for the planned use of the petroleum reserves under the sea, which are—and must remain—vested in the Federal Government. [Applause.] We must extend our programs of soil conservation. We must place our forests on a sustained-yield basis, and encourage the development of new sources of vital minerals.

In all this we must make sure that the benefits of these public undertakings are directly available to the people. Public power should be carried to consuming areas by public transmission lines where necessary to provide electricity at the lowest possible rates. [Applause.] Irrigation waters should serve family farms and not land speculators. [Applause.]

The Government has still other opportunities to help raise the standard of living of our citizens. These opportunities lie in the fields of social security, health, education, housing, and civil rights.

The present coverage of the social-security laws is altogether inadequate, and benefit payments are too low. One-third of our workers are not covered.

Those who receive old age and survivors insurance benefits receive an average payment of only $25 a month. Many others who cannot work because they are physically disabled are left to the mercy of charity. We should expand our social-security program, both as to size of benefits and extent of coverage, against the economic hazards due to unemployment, old age, sickness, and disability. [Applause.]

We must spare no effort to raise the general level of health in this country. In a nation as rich as ours, it is a shocking fact that tens of millions lack adequate medical care. We are short of doctors, hospitals, and nurses. We must remedy these shortages. Moreover, we need—and we must have without further delay—a system of prepaid medical insurance which will enable every American to afford good medical care. [Applause.]

It is equally shocking that millions of our children are not receiving a good education. Millions of them are in overcrowded, obsolete buildings. We are short of teachers, because teachers' salaries are too low to attract new teachers, or to hold the ones we have. All these school problems will become much more acute as a result of the tremendous increase in the enrollment in our elementary schools in the next few years. I cannot repeat too strongly my desire for prompt Federal financial aid to the States to help them operate and maintain their school systems. [Applause.]

The governmental agency which now administers the programs of health, education, and social security should be given full departmental status.

The housing shortage continues to be acute. As an immediate step, the Congress should enact the provisions for low-rent public housing, slum clearance, farm housing, and housing research which I have repeatedly recommended. The number of low-rent public housing units provided for in the legislation should be increased to 1,000,000 units in the next 7 years. [Applause.] Even this number of units will not begin to meet our need for new housing.

Most of the houses we need will have to be built by private enterprise, without public subsidy. By producing too few rental units and too large a proportion of high-priced houses, the building industry is rapidly pricing itself out of the market. Building costs must be lowered. [Applause.]

The Government is now engaged in a campaign to induce all segments of the building industry to concentrate on the production of lower-priced housing. Additional legislation to encourage such housing will be submitted.

The authority which I have requested, to allocate materials in short supply and to impose price ceilings on such materials, could be used, if found necessary, to channel more materials into homes large enough for family life at prices which wage earners can afford. [Applause.]

The driving force behind our progress is our faith in our democratic institutions. That faith is embodied in the promise of equal rights and equal opportunities which the founders of our Republic proclaimed to their countrymen and to the whole world.

The fulfillment of this promise is among the highest purposes of government. The civil rights proposals I made to the Eightieth Congress, I now repeat to the Eighty-first Congress. [Applause.] They should be enacted in order that the Federal Government may assume the leadership and discharge the obligations clearly placed upon it by the Constitution.

I stand squarely behind those proposals.

Our domestic programs are the foundation of our foreign policy. The world today looks to us for leadership because we have so largely realized, within our borders, those benefits of democracy for which most of the peoples of the world are yearning.

We are following a foreign policy which is the outward expression of the democratic faith we profess. We are doing what we can to encourage free states and free peoples throughout the world, to aid the suffering and afflicted in foreign lands, and to strengthen democratic nations against aggression.

The heart of our foreign policy is peace. We are supporting a world organization to keep peace and a world economic policy to create prosperity for mankind. Our guiding star is the principle of international cooperation. To this concept we have made a national commitment as profound as anything in history. To it we have pledged our resources and our honor.

Until a system of world security is established upon which we can safely rely, we cannot escape the burden of creating and maintaining armed forces sufficient to deter aggression. We have made great progress in the last year in the effective organization of our armed forces, but further improvements in our national security legislation are necessary. Universal training is essential to the security of the United States. [Applause.]

During the course of this session I shall have occasion to ask the Congress to consider several measures in the field of foreign policy. At this time I recommend that we restore the Reciprocal Trade Agreements Act to full effectiveness, and extend it for 3 years. We should also open our doors to displaced persons without unfair discrimination.

It should be clear by now to all nations that we are not seeking to freeze the status quo. We have no intention of preserving the injustices of the past. We welcome the constructive efforts being made by many nations to achieve a better life for their citizens. In the European recovery program, in our good-neighbor policy, and in the United Nations we have begun to batter down those national walls which block the economic growth and the social advancement of the peoples of the world.

We believe that if we hold resolutely to this course, the principle of international cooperation will eventually command the approval even of those nations which are now seeking to weaken or subvert it.

We stand at the opening of an era which can mean either great achievement or terrible catastrophe for ourselves and for all mankind.

The strength of our Nation must continue to be used in the interest of all our people rather than a privileged few. It must continue to be used unselfishly in the struggle for world peace and the betterment of mankind the world over.

This is the task before us.

It is not an easy one. It has many complications, and there will be strong opposition from selfish interests.

I hope for cooperation from farmers, from labor, and from business. Every segment of our population and every individual has a right to expect from our Government a fair deal.

When I first appeared before the Congress and addressed you on the 16th of April 1945, I quoted King Solomon's prayer wherein he asked for wisdom and ability to govern his people as they should be governed. I explained to you at that time that the task before me was one of the greatest in the history of the world and that it was necessary to have the complete cooperation of the Congress and the people of the United States.

We are now taking a new start with the same situation. It is absolutely essential that your President have the complete cooperation of the Congress to carry out the great works that must be done to keep the peace in this world and to keep this country prosperous. [Applause.]

The people and the country have a right to expect that the Congress and the President will work in the closest cooperation with one objective—the welfare of the people of this Nation as a whole.

In the months ahead I know that I shall be able to cooperate with this Congress. [Applause.]

I am confident that the Divine Power which has guided us to this time of fateful responsibility and glorious opportunity will not desert us now.

With that help from Almighty God which we have humbly acknowledged at every turning point in our national life, we shall be able to perform the great tasks which He now sets before us. [Applause, the Members rising.]

At 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m., the President retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The members of the President's Cabinet retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

The ambassadors, ministers, and chargés d'affaires of foreign governments retired from the Hall of the House of Representatives.

At 1 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m., the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the President pro tempore and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, for Brooklyn, tomorrow will be so much better that this year shall not pass without the reelection of New York's and Brooklyn's great Mayor O'Dwyer and the rightful return to Brooklyn of the world's baseball championship.

THE MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, President Truman's message to Congress presented in substance a program for state socialism.

It is a program of defeatism that pretends to look forward but actually is backward. He recommended that the United States follow the example of the tired, bankrupt, regimented people of Europe.

He seeks to induce the American people to sell their American birthright of individual freedom and opportunity for a mess of Truman political pottage: More debts, more taxes, more Government control, and more bureaucracy.

THE MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, more than a quarter of a century ago a great President, Theodore Roosevelt, gave to the people of the United States the Square Deal.

In 1932 a great Democratic President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt, brought to the people of the United States the New Deal.

Today, another fighting, courageous Democratic President, Harry S. Truman, brought to the Congress and the people of the United States the Tru Deal.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 6, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this prayer, O God, we come to Thee as children to a loving Father. We pray that Thou wilt help our Senators to face the problems that confront them, not alone by giving them wisdom greater than their own, but also by relieving their minds of all other anxieties. May they now turn over to Thee loved ones who need the healing touch of the Great Physician, with every confidence that Thou wilt hear our prayers of intercession, and as we do the work that is before us, Thou wilt do Thy work of healing in those whom we love. May Thy help be so plain and practical in our family affairs that we shall come to believe strongly in the help Thou dost offer in our national affairs.

Deliver Thy servants from personal worries, that they may be able to give themselves wholly to the challenges of this hour. In Jesus' name we ask it. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. BARKLEY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday, January 5, 1949, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

ASCERTAINMENT OF ELECTORS FOR PRESIDENT AND VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting, pursuant to law, certified copies of the final ascertainment of the electors for President and Vice President of the United States from the States of Arizona, Connecticut, Kansas, Rhode Island, Texas, Utah, and Wyoming, which, with the accompanying papers, was ordered to lie on the table.

TRANSPORTATION OF SENATORS IN MILITARY OR NAVAL AIRCRAFT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of Defense, which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE,
Washington, December 31, 1948.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR VANDENBERG: With the consolidation of the Air Transport Service and the Naval Air Transport Service into the Military Air Transport Service, it has become desirable that all requests for air travel in military or naval aircraft by Members of the Senate be directed to the Secretary of the military department (Army, Navy, or Air Force) in whose primary interest the travel is being performed. Cases not sponsored by any one of the individual services but which may be considered in the primary interest of the Military Establishment as a whole will be referred to the Military Air Transport Board. Such requests should preferably be in writing with the certification by the chairman of the Senate committee concerned that the travel is necessary. If time is short, telephonic requests (Army telephone: Republic 6700, extension 5792; Navy telephone: Republic 7400, extension 4590; Air Force telephone: Republic 6700, extension 5318; Secretary of Military Air Transport Board telephone: Hillside 3100, extension 4131 or 3137) may be honored with the understanding that such written certification will be furnished at a later date.

Such air transportation, without reimbursement, may be furnished only when the traffic is primarily of official concern to the National Military Establishment.

It is hoped this will result in better service and an economy of effort for all concerned. I would appreciate such measures as you consider desirable to inform Members of the Senate of this policy and to encourage uniform interpretation thereof.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES FORRESTAL.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I am about to introduce several bills, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make a very brief statement concerning them.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Utah may proceed.

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, first I introduce the Federal aid to education bill in the identical form in which it passed the Senate during the last Congress under the leadership of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I also introduce at this time the science foundation bill, which was sponsored by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] and myself, and several others at the last session of Congress. This bill, also, is in the identical form, with the exception of necessary date changes, in which it passed the Senate. I may say for the benefit and information of Senators, that the bill meets the objections of the President when he vetoed a similar measure passed in the session before the last.

I am also reintroducing a bill amending the Fair Labor Standards Act. This bill is sponsored by several Senators, and was given committee consideration during the last Congress. The bill raises the minimum wage to 75 cents, and provides for one or two other necessary changes. The bill does not in any way conflict with the wage feature of the bill introduced by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] yesterday.

I also introduce a bill providing for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley features of the National Labor Relations Act, restoring the National Labor Relations Act as it was before the 1947 amendments were incorporated in it. I am making one change only, and that is to leave the National Labor Relations Board composed of five members instead of three. I am doing this primarily because the business of the Board must be continued and carried on, and also because I do not like to have it said that I am introducing a bill which would cut down my former colleague in this body, and an associate of so many Senators now serving.

The effect, Mr. President, of the introduction of these four measures will put before the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare bills consistent with the message of the President, and measures in connection with which the suggestion for new law may be considered by the committee. The repeal of the features of the 1947 law, the Taft-Hartley law, will call for other legislation, and the President's message recommended other legislation. At the same time, these other proposals may be worked out as amendments or additions to the National Labor Relations Act as it stood before 1947, quite as well as if they were offered as amendments to the act as it stands today.

In regard to the Federal aid to education bill and the science foundation bill, since the Senate has already passed these bills with substantial majorities, it seems most consistent to present them to the Senate in the form in which they have already been acted upon.

Mr. President, I also introduced a bill, on behalf of myself and other Senators, authorizing the Federal Security Administrator to assist the States in the development of community recreation programs for the people of the United States.

I also introduce a bill to authorize the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Weber Basin reclamation project in Utah.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills introduced by the Senator from Utah will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 246) to authorize the appropriation of funds to assist the States and Territories in financing a minimum foundation education program of public elementary and secondary schools, and in reducing the inequalities of educational opportunities through public elementary and secondary schools, for the general welfare, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself, Mr. HILL, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. NEELY, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. ELLENDER, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. LONG, Mr. TAFT, Mr. TOBEY, Mr. AIKEN, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. MORSE, and Mr. IVES), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The bill (S. 247) to promote the progress of science; to advance the national health, prosperity, and welfare; tc secure the national defense; and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself, Mr. KILGORE, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. SMITH of New Jersey, Mr. CORDON, and Mr. SALTONSTALL), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The bill (S. 248) to provide for the amendment of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself, Mr. PEPPER, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. GREEN, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCGRATH, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MYERS, Mr. TAYLOR, and Mr. WAGNER), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The bill (S. 249) to diminish the causes of labor disputes burdening or obstructing interstate and foreign commerce, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The bill (S. 250) to authorize the Federal Security Administrator to assist the States in the development of community recreation programs for the people of the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah (for himself, Mr. MURRAY, Mr. MAGNUSON, and Mr. AIKEN), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

The bill (S. 251) to authorize the construction, operation, and maintenance of the Weber Basin reclamation project, Utah, introduced by Mr. THOMAS of Utah, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

DEFINITION OF REGULAR AND OVERTIME PAY RATES

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, by request, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill which is identical with one I introduced in May of last year providing for fair definition of regular and overtime rates of pay. This bill, popularly known as the overtime-on-overtime bill, has been urged by numerous business groups who are deeply concerned by the flood of suits that have been filed in our courts for overtime-on-overtime pay. Unfortunately, sufficient time was lacking in the Eightieth Congress to take up and consider this legislation. I am, therefore, hoping that it will be considered on a nonpartisan basis in this present Congress.

When Congress was confronted by a similar challenge with the portal-to-portal pay dispute it enacted a bill which was subsequently validated by the United States Supreme Court. The wisdom of that bill has been proved by experience and I feel that the wisdom of overtime-on-overtime legislation has also already become apparent. I send to the desk, therefore, and ask to be printed this overtime-on-overtime measure.

The bill (S. 252) to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts, to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILEY (by request), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RIVER DEVELOPMENT IN THE NEW ENGLAND STATES

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I introduce a bill calling for authorization of an appropriation of funds for a complete and comprehensive survey of the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers, together with their tributaries and watersheds, and other rivers in the New England States having possibilities of power, flood control, and other development. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief explanatory statement of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 253) to provide for a comprehensive survey to promote the development of hydroelectric power, flood control, and other improvements on the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers and such other rivers in the New England States where improvements are feasible, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Works.

The statement presented by Mr. LODGE was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXPLANATORY STATEMENT BY SENATOR LODGE

One of the principal purposes of this joint survey by the Army engineers and the Federal Power Commission is to determine the full potentialities of these rivers as sources of sorely needed and reasonably priced hydroelectric power which New England farmers, manufacturers, and home owners must have. The recently manifested trend of large industrial concerns to move away from New England to other sections of the country because of the high rates locally charged for power makes this study especially vital.

Citizens of New England are required to contribute millions of dollars for low-cost hydroelectric projects on the rivers of the South, West, and Northwest. It is only fair that the people of New England share in the benefits of such policies.

The bill also calls for a study of New England rivers from the point of view of improving flood-control measures. The recent flash floods in the Berkshires caused millions of dollars of unnecessary waste and damage in addition to the tragic loss of life. Action should be started immediately to protect this area from future calamities of this type.

Another factor which this bill takes into consideration is the problem of water pollution. We have these fine rivers in New England which in many areas constitute a menace to healthy living conditions because of pollution. Moreover, pollution prevents development of these rivers for recreational purposes. There are many areas which would provide splendid, beautiful recreational facilities for citizens living in nearby cities and towns—swimming, boating, fishing, and picnicking. Licking the pollution problem would mean much to residents of these areas for that reason alone.

The joint engineer and power commission survey authorized in my bill is modeled on existing river-and-harbor legislation under which official action on the TVA and other power projects was initiated in 1926. My bill also includes such other important subsidiary matters as improvement of navigation, reforestation, and soil conservation.

The text of Senator LODGE's bill is as follows:

A bill to provide for a comprehensive survey to promote the development of hydroelectric power, flood control and other improvements on the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers and such other rivers in the New England States where improvements are feasible

Be it enacted, etc., That the Chief of Engineers, under the direction of the Secretary of the Army, and the Federal Power Commission are jointly hereby authorized and directed to make a complete and comprehensive examination, survey, or other investigation as, in their opinion, may be required, of the Merrimack and Connecticut Rivers, together with their tributaries and watersheds, and such other rivers in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and Connecticut whereon power development appears feasible and practicable, with a view to the formulation of plans for the most effective and efficient improvement of such streams for the purposes of hydroelectric power development and the prosecution of such improvement in combination with the development of navigation, the control of floods, the needs of irrigation, reforestation, the conservation of soil and other natural resources, the control of water pollution, and the establishment of recreational facilities. The Chief of Engineers and the Federal Power Commission are further jointly hereby directed to report to Congress as soon as practicable the results of such examination and survey, together with such recommendations as they may deem advisable.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate at the earliest practicable date the results of its investigation together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Morning business is closed.

DISPOSITION OF PAYMENTS BY FINLAND

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, if it is appropriate at this time, I ask unanimous consent that I may make a few remarks in connection with the introduction of the Finnish-aid joint resolution which I introduced yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator may proceed.

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, a little over a year ago, in collaboration with a number of my colleagues in the Senate, I introduced a joint resolution to provide that any future payments by the Republic of Finland on the principal or interest of its debt of the First World War to the United States shall be used to provide educational and technical instruction and training in the United States for citizens of Finland. Because of the uncertainties with regard to the Finnish situation at that time, and at the request of the State Department, we postponed consideration of the joint resolution during the Eightieth Congress. I am now advised by the State Department that the way ahead is clear, and that the Department has no objection to the proposal. Yesterday, in consequence, I introduced a new joint resolution having the same general objective.

In collaboration with the State Department, and in response to suggestions that came to me from the Acting Secretary of State, Hon. Robert Lovett, the new joint resolution has been slightly revised and given a somewhat wider application than was afforded by the draft I introduced last year. The purpose, however, is the same.

During the past year the Republic of Finland has paid to the United States the interest due on its World War I indebtedness, just as it has in previous years. To make this payment, it was difficult for Finland to secure the necessary dollars. The fact of these payments is of vastly more importance and significance than the mere payment of money from one country to another to settle a debt. As I said last year, it is my judgment that this is a matter of such importance that we should properly commemorate it. It has seemed to some of my colleagues and myself that now may be an appropriate time to review what Finland has done through the years in meeting her payments on her World War I debt, and to do some significant act to demonstrate our appreciation of her integrity. It was in this spirit that we offered our joint resolution of last year, and it is in this spirit that my colleagues and I are offering a revised joint resolution this year with the same end in view.

And now for the record let me review briefly the history of this obligation. Twenty-eight years ago, on the 30th day of June 1919, the American Relief Administration, an organization created and financed by the United States Government, consigned a quantity of foodstuffs and other relief aid to the newly created Government of the Republic of Finland. Eleven months later this same organization sent the people of Finland a second consignment of relief supplies. The total value of these two consignments was $8,281,926.17. At that time, just after emerging from centuries of control by other governments—and I regret to say that at the present time Finland is suffering from that situation—neither the people of Finland nor their Government could do more than promise to pay for these supplies at some time in the future.

Since that time other nations, great and small, rich and poor, have been compelled to default on their debt payments to the United States. I am not commenting on or criticizing that fact, but I do want to emphasize that at the time when this was happening the heroic people of little Finland have repeatedly demonstrated that they place integrity above comfort or convenience. They have constantly made payments on their indebtedness to the United States as those payments fell due.

These remarkable people, who contend with adverse destinies in a severe climate and who struggle for a living in a land which nature has treated with so little generosity, appear determined in a world of forgotten principles to make their country an example of integrity.

It is true that Finland faltered in her debt payments three times, but these falterings were only for brief periods—once, in 1932, under the shock of a world depression, and twice in the 1940's, when a World War made debt payments impossible. But let me note here that each time Finland carefully arranged for a moratorium agreement to cover these temporary defaults.

I am well aware that other countries which owed money to the United States after the First World War, and which have since defaulted on their debts, had serious difficulties to encounter, and that there may be reasons why their obligations could not be met. We find the appalling figure of nearly $15,000,000,000 owed by these other countries, with less than $3,000,000,000 repaid in principal and interest. Whereas other nations have repaid 18½ percent of their original indebtedness, Finland to date has paid a sum equal to more than 103 percent of her original debt. That is to say, against an original debt of $8,281,926.17, Finland has paid $8,541,558.43, including some $309,000 of interest on the debt before it was funded. The balance due to the United States today, counting interest payments of approximately $560,000, which were deferred by the moratorium agreements, amounts to the sum of $7,962,640.02, according to figures furnished by the Treasury Department. This is comparable to what Finland has paid already, and as a matter of fact it is nearly the full amount of the original indebtedness.

Some may seek to disparage Finland's payment record because she owed so little in comparison with the amount other nations owe us, but that is wholly beside the point. In the first place, Finland's resources are slender and her needs great, but of far greater importance is this fact: Integrity is a question of quality not quantity. Her payment of her debt proves that the quality of Finland's integrity has successfully met all financial tests. The attitude of her people toward the people to whom she owes this debt proves that they are a truly superior people. To them America is not a grasping, materialistic land. Instead, immediately after their own country, it is the land of their heart's desire.

Circumstances, of course, make it impossible for Finland to send her people here in any large numbers, and, of course, obviously, the suggestion is impractical, but there is something we can do to aid them in their grim struggle against disease, destruction, and want. We can extend to them the hand of friendship in their desperate need by helping them to train a new generation of technical experts to replace their war-lost generation. On the basis of population Finland's war losses were 10 times greater than those of the United States.

Our offer to help Finland train the experts she so desperately needs carries other important possibilities. Such an act of disinterested helpfulness on our part will serve as an expression of good will which will warm the hearts and strengthen the hopes of the brave people of Finland.

In proposing that we apply the moneys hereafter paid by Finland to us on her World War I debt to the education of her young people—and that is the proposal I made yesterday in introducing the joint resolution—we are not proposing something new or untried. We are not establishing any new precedent. The precedent we are suggesting was established by the United States when nearly 40 years ago we remitted to China the balance of the Boxer indemnity payment "as an act of friendship in order to further develop the educational and other cultural activities of China."

I can tell Senators out of my own experience something about the beneficial results which have followed another project of a similar nature. The organization of which I speak is the Belgian-American Educational Foundation, of which I have been a director since it was created, in 1920, by former President Herbert Hoover. The funds for this foundation were derived from the liquidation of supplies which had been handled by the Belgian Relief Commission. During the 27 years of its existence, this foundation has arranged for the exchange of more than 700 individual students between the two countries. Several important results have followed. At the outbreak of World War II nearly one-quarter of the teaching and research faculty of the Belgian universities had been graduate students in American universities. One prime minister and six cabinet members have likewise done graduate work in American universities. Numbers of American and Belgian professors and specialists have been exchanged between our American and Belgian universities. I doubt whether there is a country in Europe where the ideals and purposes of the American people are better understood and respected than they are in Belgium. Belgium, in Europe, is a small country geographically, but I think I am safe in saying that there is no other country of Europe for which we in the United States have greater respect and affection.

These two acts of friendship with China and Belgium respectively are outstanding landmarks in our history which have closely cemented the cordial relations—and, yes, affections—of the people of the United States for the Chinese and the Belgians.

In light of these experiences, in light of Finland's need, and following our own Government's precedent of good will in handling the Boxer indemnity in China, in behalf of my colleagues and myself, yesterday I introduced Senate Joint Resolution 3, authorizing the President of the United States to hold in a special fund any payments which the Government of the Republic of Finland in the future may make in discharge of its World War I indebtedness to our Government. This fund shall be used to finance—

(a) Studies, instruction, technical training, and other educational activities for citizens of the Republic of Finland in the United States and its Territories and possessions, including payment for travel—together with transportation to and from Finland—tuition, subsistence, and other expenses incident to such activities, for the purpose of enabling the people of Finland to have the services of a new generation of technical experts to aid them in their efforts to rebuild the shattered economy and destroyed areas of their country; and

(b) The selection, purchase, and shipment of (1) American scientific, technical, and scholarly books and books of American literature for higher educational and research institutions of Finland, and (2) American laboratory and technical equipment for higher education and research in Finland.

Mr. President, as I previously stated, yesterday I introduced this revised joint resolution on behalf of myself and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HENDRICKSON], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY].

FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to make a brief statement in connection with a bill introduced by the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. TAFT. I have joined today in reintroducing, together with the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the bill to provide Federal aid to education in an annual sum of approximately $260,000,000.

This is the same bill passed by the Senate in 1948. Its main purpose is to equalize educational opportunities for our boys and girls throughout the United States and increase the money available for that purpose, especially in the poorer States. Experience shows that many of these States, even though they make a greater comparative financial effort than the wealthier States, are unable to provide a minimum basic education for many children. The result has been widespread illiteracy in certain districts, and that means, of course, a failure of the equality of opportunity which we desire for all children born in this country.

Assistance is given to a State only after it has provided from its own funds a percentage of its people's income in excess of the general average throughout the United States. The only condition is that it shall make available from its own and Federal funds, at least $50 per child for every school, including separate colored schools, within the State. Except for this requirement, the bill forbids any Federal interference in the educational policy of a State, and prohibits Federal interference with school administration.

A number of amendments have been suggested. In the committee, a study of present statistics of income may permit amendments increasing further the standard prescribed. The standard now contained in the bill is $50. We may wish also to consider other amendments.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I should like to propound an inquiry. I am glad to say that I was given the privilege of joining in the introduction of the bill to provide Federal aid for education, to which so many of us have been so long attached.

However, there is one amendment which I hope the committee may consider, and that is an amendment to provide funds on some proper basis for the construction of school buildings. I believe that the bill as introduced this year, and as passed by the Senate last year, provided funds for operating expenses, and primarily for teachers' salaries. However, it did not provide funds for the construction of buildings for public schools. May I ask whether the present bill includes such a provision?

Mr. TAFT. This bill does not contain any such provision. This bill is exactly the same as the bill passed by the Senate last year.

Mr. PEPPER. I raise this question because I wish to invite the attention not only of the sponsors of the bill but of all Senators to the great need, which certainly prevails in my State—and I presume throughout the country—for funds with which to construct school buildings.

We have made progress in the field of teachers' salaries and in providing other facilities, but everywhere I turn in my State I find the greatest need for funds to aid in building construction. We simply do not have sufficient facilities to accommodate the growing school population and to accommodate the teachers we are able to provide. I give notice that it is my desire and intention to bring to the attention of the committee, when this subject is considered by the committee, the need for funds to aid in building construction.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, it seems to me that if we are going into the field of Federal aid for local public works, we become involved in a different principle from that of granting aid to pay the current operating expenses of schools. Certain districts are so poor that they cannot even operate schools.

I suggest to the Senator that if he wishes to present that issue, it should be presented in a separate bill. I think it presents a different fundamental principle. While any amendments, of course, will be considered by the committee, I hope the Senator will present that issue in the form of a separate program. Such a program would involve a great many other considerations. Standards for school construction must be provided, just as standards for hospital construction are prescribed.

I hope that question will not become involved in the bill which the Senate has already once approved, and which I hope we may approve without controversy or long-drawn-out discussion, so that the House may have ample time to give the bill more favorable consideration than it received last year.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I would not want to do anything to retard passage of the bill. I am glad to have the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio. At the same time, I do not see any difference between the Federal Government giving aid to States for the construction of school buildings and the Federal Government providing aid in furnishing instruction. Nor do I distinguish between construction of school buildings and construction of hospitals, which is already a Federal policy. Nor do I distinguish between Federal aid in the construction of highways and Federal aid in the construction of school buildings.

Moreover, I find in my State great need for the construction of dormitories and faculty housing at our colleges and universities.

I see no reason why the principles of Federal housing aid and housing assistance, generally, should not be extended to the construction of dormitories for students at colleges and universities, and the provision of faculty housing. I invite the attention of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] to the possibility of considering that function as well as those already included in the bill, in the introduction of which I am proud to be privileged to join.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Does not the Senator believe that the suggestion of the Senator from Ohio is a good one, and that the matter of construction should be taken up in a separate bill?

Mr. PEPPER. That may prove to be the advisable approach to the subject. I am not interested in the particular bill in which the subject may be included. I merely wish to see some Federal assistance to the States in construction of school buildings. If we do not provide the buildings, naturally there will be no place for the teachers to teach or for the children to study.

I suspect that all over the country the situation is comparable to the situation in my State, and probably throughout the South. The local communities and the States are unable to provide the schools to accommodate the enlarged school population, which should be provided for.

Mr. LANGER. I fully agree with the Senator; but I believe that the subject should be treated in a separate bill.

Mr. PEPPER. That may prove to be the wisest course. When we come to consider the subject in committee we can discover what may be the better way to approach the subject.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, under an order previously made the Senate is to assemble in the Chamber of the House at 1 o'clock. I think there should be a quorum call before we depart for the House Chamber. I believe that we shall not be required to depart quite as early as we did yesterday. If we leave here at 10 minutes to 1, that will allow ample time.

Before making the point of the absence of a quorum, I wish to say that it had been my hope that by tomorrow the minority would be in position to present their committee assignments. I am advised by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and also the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] that they will not be able to do that before Monday. Therefore, there is no point in having the Senate reconvene before Monday. Accordingly, I shall ask unanimous consent that when the count of the electoral vote has been concluded in the joint session of the two Houses, the Senate stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next. I make that request at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. GREEN. Mr. President, do I correctly understand the request to mean that the adjournment will be taken after the Senate returns from the joint session and receives the report of the count of the electoral vote, when that report may be made to the Senate? It is customary for the tellers to report to the Senate what has been determined at the joint session.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does that have to be done today?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it can be done subsequently.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it can be done Monday, anyway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request with respect to the adjournment? Without objection, it is so ordered; and at the conclusion of the joint session of the two Houses today, the Senate will stand adjourned until 12 o'clock noon on Monday next.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I now suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The absence of a quorum having been suggested, the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR] is unavoidably detained, and he asks unanimous consent that he may be excused from attending the session of the Senate today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senators from North Carolina [Mr. BROUGHTON and Mr. HOEY] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] are absent on official business.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] is necessarily absent because of the death of his mother.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], and the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.

At the expiration of the recess, the Senate reassembled.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, JANUARY 6, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Rev. Arthur J. Hagan, of St. Cecilia's Roman Catholic Church, Boston, Mass., offered the following prayer:

In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. Amen.

Grant us, Thy servants, O Lord God, to enjoy perpetual health of mind and body. Thou who art the strength of them that hope in Thee, favorably give ear to our supplications, since without Thee, mortal infirmity can do nothing. Grant the help of Thy grace to the President of these United States, who this day is officially elected the Chief Executive of our beloved country; to the members of his Cabinet, the Speaker, and the Members of the Congress, and all others who have been or will be invested with authority. Guide and direct them, O Heavenly Father, in the way of righteousness and justice that our Nation, believing in Thee, may be a beacon light of hope to the nations of the world toward the attainment of a universal peace. Drive out of our hearts all hate and intolerance that charity and brotherly love might prevail among all men. Thus, we ask for all the blessing of God, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that some Members who have not yet taken the oath of office are here. If they will present themselves in the well of the House, the Chair will be glad to administer the oath to them.

Mr. WOODRUFF, Mr. COLE of New York, Mr. POULSON, and Mr. NORBLAD appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

SPEAKER RAYBURN'S BIRTHDAY

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, the birthday of any person is a matter of significance to him and to his family. The birthday of a great American in the life of our country is a matter of significance to the people of the country. But the birthday of our beloved Speaker is a matter of great significance to each and every Member of the House of Representatives, without regard to his or her party affiliation.

This is the birthday anniversary of our beloved Speaker. I know I speak the sentiment of all of my colleagues when I extend to him my congratulations and our very, very best wishes, with the hope that God will bless him with at least 50 more birthday anniversaries. From the democratic angle, I know my Republican friends will not be disturbed or offended if he continues as Speaker for countless years to come.

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I want to add my sincere best wishes to those of your legion of friends throughout the country and the world who are today reminding you again of another anniversary. However, your spirit of fair play, your zeal to serve, and your ability to lead will never grow old. Your enthusiasm, your friendliness, and your dynamic personality will continue to lead, especially us newer Members of Congress, into paths of richer happiness and service. My personal wish is that the years may bring to you increased happiness through service in the very important position which is the fulfillment of your heart's desire.

RECESS

The SPEAKER. The House will stand in recess until 12:50 p. m.

(Whereupon, at 12:09 p. m., the House stood in recess until 12:50 p. m.)

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, at 12 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m., the House was called to order by the Speaker.

APPOINTMENT OF SUBSTITUTE TELLER ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. GAMBLE] is unavoidably detained and is unable to serve as teller. The Chair designates the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GRAHAM] to act as teller in his stead.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES

At 12 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m., the Doorkeeper, Mr. W. Mosley Miller, announced the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Senate of the United States.

The Senate entered the Hall, headed by the President pro tempore and the Secretary of the Senate, the Members and officers of the House rising to receive them.

The President pro tempore of the Senate took his seat as the Presiding Officer of the joint convention of the two Houses, the Speaker of the House occupying the chair on his left.

The joint session was called to order by the President pro tempore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the Congress, the Senate and the House of Representatives, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution and laws of the United States, have met in joint session for the purpose of opening the certificates and ascertaining and counting the votes of the electors of the several States for President and Vice President. Under well-established precedent, unless a motion shall be made in any case, the reading of the formal portions of the certificates will be dispensed with. After ascertainment has been made that the certificates are authentic and correct in form, the tellers will count and make a list of the votes cast by the electors of the several States.

The tellers, Mr. GREEN and Mr. WHERRY, on the part of the Senate, and Mrs. NORTON and Mr. GRAHAM, on the part of the House, took their places at the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hands to the tellers the certificates of the electors for President and Vice President of the State of Alabama, and they will count and make a list of the votes cast by that State.

Mr. GREEN (one of the tellers). Mr. President, the certificate of the electoral vote of the State of Alabama seems to be regular in form and authentic, and it appears therefrom that J. Strom Thurmond, of the State of South Carolina, received 11 votes for President, and Fielding L. Wright, of the State of Mississippi, received 11 votes for Vice President.

The tellers then proceeded to read, count, and announce, as was done in the case of Alabama, the electoral votes of the several States in an alphabetical order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Gentlemen of the Congress, the certificates of all of the States have now been opened and read, and the tellers will make final ascertainment of the result and deliver the same to the President pro tempore.

The tellers delivered to the President pro tempore the following statement of the results:

The undersigned, THEODORE FRANCIS GREEN and KENNETH S. WHERRY, tellers on the part of the Senate, MARY T. NORTON and LOUIS E.

GRAHAM, tellers on the part of the House of Representatives, report the following as the result of the ascertainment and counting of the electoral vote for President and Vice President of the United States for the term beginning on the 20th day of January 1949:

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] will kindly take the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. COOPER assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. GATHINGS].

THE LATE WILLIAM J. DRIVER

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to announce to the House the passing of a distinguished former Member of this body, my predecessor, Hon. William J. Driver, who passed on at his home city, Osceola, Ark., on October 1, 1948.

Judge Driver was a Member of this House for a period of 18 years, during which time he served on the important Committee on Flood Control. He was instrumental in the passage of various proposals for the construction of flood-control projects in the First District of Arkansas. The last few years of his service here was on the great Rules Committee of the House. He was an outstanding, learned, and able legislator. He was most generous in assisting me when I came to this House. He extended himself in my behalf like few, if any other, would have done.

In his early days he was a practicing attorney in Mississippi County and eastern Arkansas. He later became circuit judge of the second judicial district of the State of Arkansas, a member of the Arkansas Legislature, and a member of the constitutional convention of Arkansas in the year 1918, having been elected to the Congress in the Sixty-seventh Congress. He was reelected to the Sixty-eighth, Sixty-ninth, Seventieth, Seventy-first, Seventy-second, Seventy-third, Seventy-fourth, and Seventy-fifth Congresses.

He was beloved by the people he so nobly served.

He was a gentleman in the truest sense. He was friendly and likable.

He made friends readily. He always retained friendships made. He was kind and considerate of everyone with whom he was associated.

One attribute with which he was endowed was his devotion for his loved ones—his wife, who preceded him in death; his son, William J. Driver, Jr.; his grandchildren; and other members of the family.

He was a scion of an illustrious family who were pioneer settlers in Mississippi County. His father was most outstanding and public spirited, being one of the original promoters of a levee system to protect the highly productive alluvial area from the ravaging floodwaters of the Mississippi River.

In recent years Judge Driver had devoted his energies to serving as president of the Planters Bank. He also had joined his son in the operation of farming interests and the managing of business properties.

My heart goes out to the bereaved ones who must carry on without his guiding counsel and loving, tender kindness.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, one of the sad things about service in this House is the frequency with which the "milestones along the highway of life become monuments to departed friends."

I came to the Congress at the same time Judge Driver did in 1921 and was intimately associated with him all during the years he was a Member of this body. He was one of the finest Representatives I have ever known.

He was one of the greatest characters I have ever known.

He was one of the finest Americans I have ever known.

In his services here he put the welfare of his country above all other considerations.

I knew the members of his family and was intimately associated with him, having lived next door to them, and I can truthfully say there never was a finer or more affectionate husband and father than "Bill" Driver was at all times.

Measured from every standpoint, I do not believe I have ever met a finer character.

In the words of Shakespeare:

His life was gentle, and the elements so mixed in him that Nature might stand up and say to all the world, "This was a man."

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTINGTON. Mr. Speaker, the custom of pausing in the proceedings of the House to take notice of the passing of former Members is most appropriate.

I gladly join in tribute to the memory and the services of the late William J. Driver, of Arkansas. Our districts are separated by the Mississippi River, but our interests and our problems are substantially identical. They are located in the alluvial valley of the lower Mississippi River. They are subject to the flood hazards of that mighty river. It was natural, therefore, for me, who came to Congress some 4 years after he began his service, to be closely associated with him in promoting flood control not only along the Mississippi River but along all other rivers of the United States. He was an authority on the Mississippi River. From his youth he had been interested in the construction of levees and other protective work. He and I served as members of the Committee on Flood Control until he left that committee to spend the remainder of his service in the House as a member of the Committee on Rules.

William J. Driver was born on March 2, 1873, and died on October 1, 1948, at Osceola, Ark., in the community in which he spent his entire life. He was a patriotic citizen and grew up in the public service. He took an active interest always in civic and political affairs. He was a Member of the House of Representatives in Arkansas. He served with distinguished ability as a judge of the circuit court and attracted State-wide attention by his ability as a presiding judge. He was courageous, fearless, and insisted upon obedience to the laws of the land.

He was a member of the constitutional convention of Arkansas in 1918. He was among the leaders of that epoch-making convention.

For 18 years—from March 4, 1921, to January 3, 1939—William J. Driver was a Member of the House of Representatives. He served on the Committee on Flood Control and on the Committee on Rules. He was often called upon to preside in the Committee of the Whole. He had the capacity to make and keep friends. He believed in party government and majority rule. He was among the leaders of the House of Representatives.

Following his retirement from the House of Representatives on January 3, 1939, he engaged in banking and agricultural pursuits. He continued to take an active interest in public and political affairs. At the age of 75, as one of the elder statesmen of Arkansas, he passed away, full of honors and full of years.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], our distinguished majority leader.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to hear the announcement of the death of our late beloved colleague, and I join in the expressions of sorrow that have been made by those who preceded me.

Bill Driver was one of the ablest men with whom I have ever served; a sincere, conscientious legislator; one possessed of a fine outlook on life and a very sound philosophy. If ever a man amplified love of neighbor, Bill Driver did. He always had a national outlook on public questions. As a Member of the House, particularly coming from Massachusetts, I regret his passing. But I am pleased to make these observations about one of the most nationalistic minded—and when I say nationalistic I mean from the broad national angle—legislators with whom I have ever served in the person of our late beloved colleague, Bill Driver.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Rules, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it was my great pleasure to have had the honor of serving with Mr. Driver for many years on the Committee on Rules. Though I have served with many outstanding and able Members I believe beyond any doubt that he was one of the greatest Americans that ever served on that committee. He had a noble soul. He was a man of vision and ability, and he was fair at all times, ever striving to do justice to all. I, too, deplore the sad report of his passing. I hope that other gentlemen will follow in his views and ideals and have the interest of our country at heart as he had in his service in this body.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT].

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, when I first came to this House 20 years ago as a young man, one of the first Members in this body with whom I became acquainted was the late and lamented Judge Will Driver. I represented then the old Fourteenth District of Missouri, in the southeast corner of our State, which bordered on Judge Driver's district. We had many interests in common. We served together on the Committee on Flood Control. Both of us have served as president of the National Rivers and Harbors Congress. Judge Driver was tremendously interested in the conservation and utilization of our soil and water resources, not only flood control, irrigation, and reclamation but also navigation and transportation.

I was not very much pleased when he was defeated. I had not, of course, met his successor, the present Member from Arkansas, Mr. GATHINGS. But I remember that I asked the judge, after serving so many years here, how he was defeated. He said, "DEWEY, my boy, I was defeated by a very fine young man, and I predict he is going to have a great career in the House." He is. TOOK GATHINGS is a worthy successor to an able Congressman and a noble man. Then I remember when the present Member, Mr. GATHINGS, arrived here. Judge Driver took him around personally and introduced him to various Members and helped him get located. That only goes to show the generous heart that he had. He was a kind man. He was an able jurist. He was always eminently fair. His judicious mind always saw both sides of an issue.

He was my personal friend. I thoroughly enjoyed every hour that I spent with him, whether it was in committee or when we took many trips throughout different sections of the country.

I shall miss him greatly, and extend my sympathies to his loved ones.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. HARRIS. It was with deep regret, Mr. Speaker, that I learned of the passing of Judge Driver. He was an honorable, useful, and worthy citizen of our State of Arkansas. Though it was not my privilege to know him very intimately, I met him since I have been in Congress. His advice and counsel on matters of great importance were of exceedingly great benefit to me. Judge Driver had an outstanding record in this House. He was not only known in the State of Arkansas as an outstanding and useful citizen, but we feel and we know that the entire country has lost a great and honorable man.

I join my colleague and other friends in paying this tribute of respect to him and expressing our deep sympathy to his family at his passing. May his soul rest with God.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GATHINGS. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. NORRELL. I desire the RECORD to show that I endorse everything that has been said about Judge Driver. He was a fine businessman; he was an excellent lawyer; he was a great orator; he was an able legislator; and he was a good man.

Mr. GATHINGS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who may desire to do so may extend their remarks at this point in the RECORD in connection with the passing of Judge Driver.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas.

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, it was not my privilege to serve in the House with Mr. Driver, but I knew him well and admired him profoundly. He was one of the ablest Representatives of our State ever to serve in the Congress, and I join my colleagues in these expressions of sorrow at his passing.

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Speaker, I, too, greatly regret to receive the word of the death of one of our former colleagues, the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas, Judge Driver. I wish I could recount, as so many others have done here today, the interesting things in connection with his service here in the House, but most of his service here was before I came. One thing does stand out in my mind: He was unusually considerate of me as a new Member when I came here in 1937. He accorded me privileges in connection with flood-control measures and other matters coming before the River and Harbor Committee over and beyond what any new man might expect. From this kindly consideration I can appreciate all that my preceeding colleagues have said concerning this great and good man. My sympathies are extended to his family.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address he delivered before the Council of State Governments at Detroit, Mich., on December 2, 1948.

Mr. EBERHARTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial which appeared in the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

Mr. KILBURN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an excerpt from the address of Governor Dewey before the Legislature of New York State.

REPEAL OF FEDERAL TAXES ON OLEOMARGARINE

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time to call the attention of the Members of the House to a resolution adopted on November 9, 1948, by the Fifth District, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, urging Congress to take immediate action to repeal the Federal taxes on oleomargarine. The women of my home district are intensely interested in the repeal of these taxes and have set forth in this resolution reasons and facts which justify us in giving this legislation the right-of-way and in promptly passing the bill which will permit the sale of this wholesome, nutritious article of food, free from the unjustifiable, discriminatory taxes with which it has been burdened for more than half a century. I ask your consideration of this resolution, and express the hope that prompt action will be taken to bring this legislation to the floor of the House for quick passage.

REPEAL OF FEDERAL TAXES ON YELLOW MARGARINE

Whereas repeal of heavy Federal taxes on yellow margarine means real relief for the food budgets of millions of Americans, since margarine is the only table spead within the reach of consumers in the low-income brackets; and

Whereas no other consumer issue had such widespread public support during the last Congress; and

Whereas an antimargarine tax repeal bill was passed by the House of Representatives by a vote of 260 to 106, and reported favorably by the Senate committee; and

Whereas no action was taken, lack of time being one explanation given by Senate leadership; and

Whereas butter production this year is estimated to be the lowest on record—one-sixth less than in 1947—barely 10 pounds per person—and butter prices are high; and

Whereas Americans are entitled to the right to get yellow margarine without heavy Federal tax now more than ever before: Be it

Resolved, That the members of the Fifth District, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, write, wire, or telephone our Congressmen, urging that repeal of Federal antimargarine taxes be one of the first acts of the new Congress.

Mrs. R. H. JOHNS,
Chairman, Consumer Relations.
Mrs. D. N. MCCURDY,
Chairman, American Home.
Mrs. WILLIAM S. TAYLOR,
President, Fifth District, Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs.
Mrs. OSCAR PALMOUR,
National Economic Council.
Mrs. P. D. CHRISTIAN, Jr.,
Chairman, Legislation.

ATLANTA, GA., November 9, 1948.

DELAYED BUT WELCOME COOPERATION

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, in my opinion if the leaders of organized labor had shown as much practical common sense at the time the Taft-Hartley bill was being written as they are now showing, much time, money, and ill will could have been averted.

Some of us on the committee who were only interested in trying to establish more harmonious and peaceful labor relations tried repeatedly to induce various labor leaders to cooperate with us in preparing legislation which would correct some of the all too apparent inconsistencies which existed. However, instead of cooperating or admitting that any irregularities existed, they took the adamant attitude that unions were perfect, could do no wrong, and that anyone connected with the labor movement was simon-pure. I talked with many leaders in my office, but not a single one of them would admit that any condition existed which should be corrected. They even denied the presence of Communists in the labor movement. Now I notice that these same leaders promise their cooperation in working with Congress on constructive amendments to the Wagner Act. This is exactly what I tried to have them do almost 2 years ago when we were writing the Taft-Hartley Act. Therefore, if the passage of this act has done nothing more than induce labor leaders to admit that constructive amendments were necessary, as well as to have induced the CIO in convention to take action to drive Communists out of their union, it has justified its existence even though it is repealed within the next 24 hours.

I have maintained from the beginning that if the closed shop had not been outlawed and if the title had been known as the Truman Act, the Wagner Act, or the Murray-Green-Lewis Act, that opposition would have been less violent. From my observations and inquiries some of these same leaders who are now willing to cooperate hate the authors of the act much more than they dislike the act itself. If changing the title and amending the act in a few instances will give us the guarantee that labor leaders will cooperate for the best interests of their members, of industry, and of the country in general, then I think that this would be a small concession to make in exchange for industrial peace and production.

I also believe that leaders of organized labor should take more time and educate new members in the real meaning and purpose back of the labor movement. For instance, the other day in Ohio I heard a young, newly made union member remark that he had just given the boss "a d—— good cussing." When I asked him why he had done so he replied: "Well, the so-and-so can't fire me, so I just thought I'd let him know what I thought of him." In other words, instead of selling union members on the idea that the real purpose of organized labor is to provide not only better hours, wages, and working conditions for themselves, but also increased production for management in order that their jobs may continue, many of them are being indoctrinated with the idea that management is their natural enemy and that class hatred should be exemplified. I am quite certain that this indoctrinating course is the work of subversive elements within the labor movement, and now since labor is attempting to drive them out of their organization I sincerely trust that the loyal patriotic leaders in the labor movement will educate their members to the real purpose back of the labor movement.

I believe in organized labor and collective bargaining, and all the rights and benefits which labor can obtain legally by collective bargaining. However, I also believe in the rights and privileges of the 128,000,000 unorganized workers, and I hope and pray that the leaders of the labor movement will cooperate with those of us on the committee who are only interested in seeing that both groups are treated fairly and equally under the law.

THE PRESIDENT'S PROGRAM

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. BIEMILLER. Mr. Speaker, disgusted with the actions of the Eightieth Congress, the American people on November 2 gave a mandate to the President and to this Eighty-first Congress to get busy and enact a real program for their benefit. Yesterday, President Truman outlined the main points of that program.

The President's speech makes me proud to be a Member of the Eighty-first Congress. The program which he has proposed to us will, I trust, be speedily enacted, and will make us live in history as one of the most potent and progressive Congresses ever elected.

We shall be honored to work with him to continue prosperity at home and to extend it to all our people. We shall be proud to help spread it to the rest of the world and to do whatever is in our power to dispel the shadow of war which today hangs over us all. The re-election of President Truman with a Congress friendly to his principles has reassured the people of America and of the world that the United States is going forward again, after a brief lapse caused by the unfortunate election of 1946.

Already the apostles of reaction—those political bourbons who have learned nothing and forgotten everything since 1932—are assailing the President's program. They are the spiritual heirs of those who attacked Jefferson and Jackson as dangerous radicals. They are the political descendants of those who assailed Theodore Roosevelt's Square Deal and Franklin Roosevelt's New Deal as socialism and communism.

It is worth noting that the reforms of the Square Deal and the New Deal are now law and accepted by practically all Americans as a basic part of our political and economic structure.

President Truman's message is in the same tradition. If this Congress is true to the mandate the people gave it on November 2, the Tru Deal will become an integral part of American life and be as widely accepted as the Square Deal and the New Deal.

I believe President Truman's message gives us a chance to carry on in the fine American tradition enunciated so ably by Abraham Lincoln when he said:

> The legitimate object of government is to do for the people what needs to be done, but which they cannot, by individual effort, do at all, or do so well, for themselves.

That thought should be the guide for all our votes in the Eighty-first Congress.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted, I may address the House for 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I also ask that the special order I had for today be vacated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. COOPER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

THE FEDERAL SALES TAX

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, the principal responsibility, I believe, in the task of representing our districts is to know what our people back home want and how they are thinking.

To ascertain these things, a few days ago, I sent out 60,000 letters designed to reach every family in my district. In this message, I pointed out that if each person would answer the questions I asked, it would help me to do my job of representing the home folks better.

The questions I asked were about some of the leading issues the new Congress will have to settle. They dealt with the Taft-Hartley Act, price control, farm-price supports, the oleomargarine tax, with the bonus for World War II veterans, and with the sales tax.

While returns thus far received are fragmentary in comparison with what eventually will come in, I am prepared to draw a definite conclusion on one important subject.

I find that sentiment is running practically unanimous against a Federal sales tax. There just is not any support for this vicious proposal.

Of course, my stand against the sales tax is well known back home. I have always hated the very thought of such a tax.

To me, it is the perfect way for the rich man to shift his burden of tax responsibility to the poor man. The sales tax is the most diabolical method of raising revenue devised by the boys in the star chamber.

I wish to make my position emphatically clear at this time, if I was ever misunderstood before, that I will fight to the last ditch all attempts on the part of the administration or the White House to include the sales tax in the new demands for a tax increase to our Federal taxpayers and the American people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DOYLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PRICE] that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

MEXICAN OIL SITUATION

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include an article by Arthur Krock from the New York Times.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLVERTON. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, under House Resolution 595, Eightieth Congress, has conducted a continuing investigation of the subject of fuel supply and demand with particular reference to a long-range national fuel policy and the part played by various energy sources in our national defense.

Various hearings were held, and among the different aspects of the problem impressing your committee was the fact that, during these hearings, no mention was made of Mexico as a present and future source of petroleum supply. Accordingly, your committee undertook, at the invitation of the Government of Mexico, an on-the-spot study of the Mexican situation with a view to determining the place of petroleum in the economy of that country, in relations between that country and the rest of the world, particularly the United States, and the possibilities of increasing Mexican production.

The results of this study are contained in the committee's report—House Report 2470, Eightieth Congress, second session—on Mexican petroleum, which was prepared with a full realization that the development of Mexico's petroleum resources could be comprehended only in the light of its entire economy and its internal and external trade and financial position. This report, therefore, includes not only a discussion of Mexican petroleum but also the other aspects of the problem, all of which bear upon petroleum and most of which fall within the direct legislative jurisdiction of your Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Your committee's activities in the study of Mexican petroleum and the factors affecting the whole problem were discussed by Arthur Krock in the New York Times of December 30, 1948, as follows:

IN THE NATION—THE VITAL QUESTION OF MEXICAN OIL

(By Arthur Krock)

WASHINGTON, December 29.—While other committees of Congress have monopolized the headlines, the group which makes up the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, with a very able staff, has been quietly engaged in a study of more enduring importance. This is a survey of the actual and potential fuel supply in the Western Hemisphere, with special attention to Mexico and Venezuela; and the relation of this resource to Pan-American economy and the security of the United States is direct and vital.

Sometime this week the committee, headed by Representative WOLVERTON, of New Jersey, is expected to publish a progress report with the essential approval of the Democratic Members, soon to become the majority, as well as that of the Republicans. Those who have concentrated on the paramount importance of the subject are hopeful that the findings will hasten an adjustment of the current national policy which, if continued, could make Mexico an importer instead of an exporter of fuel—a very threatening prospect to the security of the United States. How threatening this would be was stressed by recent testimony at the Capitol by James Forrestal, the Secretary of Defense, to the effect that our petroleum deficiency in event of large-scale war could be 2,000,000 barrels a day.

Fifteen of the twenty-six members of the Wolverton committee investigated the Mexican oil situation at first-hand in August and September, and a subcommittee returned later on the same errand. They inspected all the major installations and fields of Petroleos Mexicanos (Pemex), the Government oil company, and returned with these impressions, which will probably be reflected in the progress report:

1. The cost and efficiency of the Marshall plan, the motive power of our own defense machinery, and that sound economy on this continent without which no "good neighbor" policy can be more than two empty words require each hemisphere supply its own petroleum needs. The reverse is true today.

2. This could come to reasonably early maturity in the Western Hemisphere, and assure enough fuel to the United States for any conceivable needs, if the Mexican potentials were properly explored and put in readiness for production.

3. The United States exports goods to the value of $500,000,000 to Mexico annually. But that cannot continue unless means are found to increase Mexico's supply of its great export crop of petroleum.

4. The obvious means is for the United States Government to give earnest consideration to loans to Mexico for this purpose. Pemex has a 5-year program, at an estimated cost of $470,000,000, to increase production from the present rate of 167,000 barrels a day to 463,000 barrels. A loan through the Export-Import Bank, to be disbursed at intervals under the supervision of an American-Mexican Commission by a United States agent, should be studied by the State Department with a view to early clearance.

It is in the area of oil production that private United States capital and the Government of Mexico have had the differences, leading to expropriation in 1938, that brought about the present situation. The Export-Import Bank, for example, has given an authorized credit of $150,000,000 for various plants, railroads, and roads in Mexico, but only $10,000,000 of this was earmarked for the state petroleum industry.

The ill feeling aroused by expropriation particularly affects certain United States petroleum companies, but others have neither inherited it nor strongly object to proposals made to them by Pemex if this Government will revise its current policy to that purpose. In fact, there have recently been discussions between Pemex and representatives of these latter companies in which the parties have found themselves near together on these proposals.

The terms offered are that, with approved financing by the Export-Import Bank, the private American companies would act as agents for Pemex, themselves choosing the sites for exploratory work, and, after discovery of sources, continue in that capacity, with the Mexican Government retaining title to the oil. After being reimbursed for capital costs and risks with about 35 percent of net income, the companies would have an option on all the supply not absolutely required by Mexico. All this could be done without changing the Mexican law.

Some American companies, however, including those which were in the thick of the expropriation battle, think 45 percent of the net income is the minimum fair arrangement, or object to other aspects of the proposal, among these the supervision by Pemex and retention of title to the product by the Mexican Government. They insist the law be changed, an attitude toward which the United States Government has been sympathetic and which has stood in the way of the Export-Import Bank loan that Mexico wants.

Thus once more two public policies of the United States are in conflict—that which is dedicated to building neighboring economy and getting adequate supplies, especially of petroleum, for any threat to our security, and that which seeks to protect American private capital abroad in its rights and agreements with foreign governments. The House committee has been searching for a meeting-ground of these policies, and its forthcoming report will demonstrate whether it has found one acceptable to most of those concerned.

Certainly Mexico, as a source of petroleum, is a better prospect for this Nation in troubled times than Venezuela, because the product can be brought in by pipes and overland conveyances without hazards of a sea voyage.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARMATZ. Mr. Speaker, I have dropped into the hopper a bill to repeal the Taft-Hartley Act and to reestablish the Wagner Labor Act as the basis for relations between labor and management.

Coming from a district which is strongly labor, I campaigned on the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, and certainly the results of the November election, both for President and Members of Congress, prove that the majority of the people favor the repeal of this act.

When the bill was approved, its backers assured us that it would reduce the number of strikes. Statistics for 1947 and the first 10 months of 1948, released by the Bureau of Labor Statistics, show a striking similarity in the number of strikes, the total of strikers, and the volume of lost working time. In some cases, the law was found to be the underlying cause of strikes.

The conservative magazine Business Week concedes that the law went too far, and, by going that far, the law defeated itself. It warns that a law, in a democratic society, will fail unless it has the consent of the people.

It is true that some amendments to the Wagner Act may be necessary. I am sure that the Labor Committee will give both labor and industry equal opportunities to present their views on any proposed changes, and thus the amendments finally submitted to the Congress should be satisfactory to both groups. Such acceptance by both sides is absolutely necessary in the interest of industrial harmony, a worthy goal for this Congress.

PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Speaker, peace with justice in the Middle East is what the world seeks. Britain's mysterious maneuvering in Egypt and Palestine and Transjordan do not seem to be contributing to that result. The British, for instance, appear to be trying to maneuver Egypt into invoking the 1936 Anglo-Egyptian treaty of assistance which Egypt has denounced as negotiated under coercion. The United States shows every sign of not being tied up with this policy of intrigue. We should throw our weight behind the new Palestine Conciliation Commission of the UN to bring peace quickly, if direct negotiations between Israel and the Arabs prove to be impossible. We should urge also that Britain make clear her stand to fully back the Conciliation Commission's search for peace, stop her maneuvers in Palestine, refrain from adding to the conflagration by sending her troops there, or renewing her arms shipments to the Arab states, and use her very real influence with the Arab states to get them to withdraw their aggressor forces from Palestine and to establish the conditions for a just peace. In no case should we be a party to British intrigues; that is not the course of security in the Middle East or of peace.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

FRIDAY, JANUARY 7, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in Heaven, we acknowledge our imperfections and pray that we may be strong and falter not in the presence of temptation.

When the way is uncertain and confused, do Thou show forth the light of Thy wisdom. Without fear or hesitation may our devotion to the public good be without stint or reservation. Grant that the Christ spirit may be the ruling passion of our conduct, that the strong may help the weak, the wise the foolish, and the rich the poor, and that peace and good will may extend and bless our people everywhere. In our Saviour's name we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

SWEARING IN OF MEMBERS

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to announce that, pursuant to the authority conferred upon him by House Resolution 28, he did, on Thursday, January 6, 1949, administer the oath of office to the Honorable A. L. BULWINKLE at Bethesda, Md.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 35) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, Whereas A. L. BULWINKLE, a Representative from the State of North Carolina, has been unable from sickness to appear in person to be sworn as a Member of this House, but has sworn to and subscribed the oath of office before the Speaker, authorized by resolution of this House to administer the oath, and the said oath of office has been presented in his behalf to the House, and there being no contest or question as to his election: Therefore

Resolved, That said oath be accepted and received by the House as the oath of office of the said A. L. BULWINKLE as a Member of this House.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] desires to take the oath of office.

Mr. FREDERICK C. SMITH presented himself at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

ADJOURNMENT OVER

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may we have some information about the program next week?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any business to come up next week. Of course, we have to wait until the committee assignments on both sides are made in order to secure real organization of the House. That will be done as speedily as possible.

On Monday it is my intention to ask unanimous consent that the House adjourn over until the following Thursday. I might make a qualification in case something develops. I do not want to say that nothing will be done, because when I make a promise to the House, as the Members know, I keep the promise. I do not see anything that will interfere at this time with going over except possibly to receive a message. I do not expect any, nor do I know of any. Therefore, there will be no business next week, so far as I know.

I may say further that we are hopeful something may be worked out by both branches between now and the 20th in relation to the salary situation confronting the President and Vice President. Of course, none of us would permit any increase to go through without due consideration of our own Speaker. I do not believe that can be worked out next week, but, as I stated, it should be done on or before January 20. It is a matter to be worked out by the leadership of both parties.

There may be one or two minor matters noncontroversial in nature which could go through only by unanimous action on the part of the House, with the leadership of both parties in complete understanding. I know of nothing, but I do want that slight qualification to be noted in case anything should develop. With that statement, I repeat I know of no business next week.

Mr. HALLECK. I have had several inquiries about the matter of increase in salaries of the President and Vice President. I recognize, of course, that it might be reached for consideration next week. Perhaps it might be well to take it up next week and dispose of the matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot say now that it will, but I would like to have the RECORD show that qualification, that little flexibility, to meet any situation that may develop, because we all know that if anything does develop it has to be done by agreement of the leadership on both sides, with complete unity as to any action taken.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the majority leader a question in reference to the salaries of the executive officers. I am willing to pay as high salaries as anyone, commensurate with the duties which they perform. I want to see that done. But I wonder whether we ought to grant a $50,000 expense bill, which will be worth more than $100,000 to him. Let us give him $100,000 additional, if necessary, but let him pay his taxes like everybody else and let him feel the pinch of paying taxes so he knows what it means to the other people of this country. If you do that I will go along with you in raising his salary, but I want him to know that he has got to do likewise when he wants other people to pay taxes.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the observation of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is well to be considered by the gentleman himself. We have to consider the question outside of any individual who might occupy the White House. The President of the United States has tremendous expenses which arise as a result of being President. A great deal of this comes out of his salary. I do not think the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other American would want to have any President subjected to that situation.

Mr. RICH. Let us make his salary what it ought to be, but let him pay his taxes just the same as anybody else and let him feel the pinch of paying taxes.

Mr. McCORMACK. We have a $2,500 expense account. We provided that exemption ourselves and I do not think the American people have condemned us for that. I am one who has made two speeches on the floor of the House to the effect that we should increase our salary to $25,000 a year, and I repeat that now. That is my viewpoint, but I am only one of a few who probably would go that far. I respect the gentleman from Pennsylvania very much, as he knows, but let me say that I do not know now just what the bill will provide, but some action should be taken. I am not discussing the contents of the bill because I have no knowledge of its ultimate scope. But, in making my announcement to the House, and being frank at all times, I wanted sufficient reservation that if it can come up, it should be brought up as expeditiously as possible.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day, and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

ARMORY CONSTRUCTION PROGRAM

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a measure to provide national defense buildings for the use of the Reserve components of the National Military Establishment of the United States.

The armory construction program, by which States and communities have provided facilities for the National Guard, is well known to the public. Of less general public knowledge is the Naval Reserve armory program, under which the Federal Government provides training facilities for naval units.

These are insufficient to meet the needs for the expanded Reserve of the present day. It is not possible for the local communities to pay the cost of additional armory construction needed for guard and Army Reserve activities. There is an added weakness of costly inefficiency in the present program, in that it encourages the construction of armories for the different services side by side in the same town.

The National Guard has long since outgrown its historic function as a State force. Other Reserve units are entirely Federal in scope. In consequence, my bill proposes to relieve State and local communities of the expense of armory construction.

It is my belief that a common armory can be shared by all Reserve components in a community and by the recruiting officers of the various services. Generally, but one night's training is required of a Reserve unit each week. This will permit common use of the drill floor. Separate offices and supply rooms should be provided for the separate Reserve components. Use as a community center during other periods will increase its value and popularize Reserve activities.

The Reserve, under the American system, is the most practical and inexpensive way of providing a backlog of trained men for defense in the event of a national emergency. One of the greatest remaining drawbacks to a strong Reserve is the lack of armories for training and study. The cost of a program of armory construction as outlined here would total at least $500,000,000, but armories are long lived, and their construction would be extended over a period of years.

I believe the construction of national defense buildings will constitute one of the greatest boons now possible for the Reserve components. The need for such buildings is now generally recognized and I believe the proposal will have the backing of the administration, the armed services and the Reserve organizations. It is my earnest hope that active consideration by the Congress can proceed at once.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOV. W. KERR SCOTT, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, yesterday was a great day in North Carolina. It was the occasion of the inauguration of Hon. W. Kerr Scott as Governor. Previous to his election as Governor, Mr. Scott had served as North Carolina commissioner of agriculture for approximately 12 years. He brings to the office of governor a wealth of experience, honest convictions, and a courageous spirit.

Because of the significance of the content of his inaugural message, I am pleased to include as a part of my remarks the text of his inaugural message. It charts a program of outstanding and progressive services and policies for the people of North Carolina. In many respects it parallels the state of the Union message by President Truman.

I would label Governor Scott's message as one of the most ambitious and deserving programs ever launched in North Carolina, and it should not only have the support of every forward-looking citizen in North Carolina but might well become a pattern for the Nation. It is with a sense of pride I kindly invite my colleagues to study this message from a great Democratic Governor of a great Democratic State.

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOV. W. KERR SCOTT, OF NORTH CAROLINA

Mr. President, Mr. Speaker, members of the general assembly, and my friends from all over North Carolina, as I assume the duties of Governor today I am deeply conscious of the great responsibilities of the office. My campaigning dealt with definite proposals for the expansion and improvement of the public service. I take office with what I believe to be a clear mandate from the people to carry out the pledges I have given. I am deeply appreciative of the great honor this State has bestowed upon me, but I am even more acutely aware of the work ahead, and I dedicate myself with all the energies of my heart and mind to the discharge of the duties of the governorship.

You ladies and gentlemen of this general assembly have been elected by the people as their lawmakers. I have been elected their chief executive. Together we have a job to do. I cherish the opportunity to work with you. I want you to know that the resources of the Governor's office will always be at your disposal.

Our State stands now at a point where it must take counsel of courage rather than fear in plotting its advance.

We know we cannot chart the future with certainty. In business, and in government—which is the biggest business of all—it is necessary to plan 2, 4, and more years ahead. Budgets and all great public-service programs must be projected in order that what we do today will dovetail into what we do tomorrow.

Without claiming to be a prophet, I say here and now that I face the future with confidence. We are now in a period of readjustment. I see it as the leveling-off process expected since the end of the war—the normal change from a seller's to a buyer's market inevitable as production catches up with shortages. There is evidence that we have passed the peak of high prices, and in the months immediately ahead it would be surprising if the economic adjustment did not exact a toll in business casualty and individual unemployment. We would be foolish not to take this probability into consideration, but I think we would be equally foolish to magnify the consequences of what should prove to be a normal adjustment, due after years of almost uninterrupted upward movement.

We have returned the Government in Washington to control of the Democratic Party, under which we enjoyed our greatest prosperity. President Truman and the Democratic Congress have a mandate from the people to safeguard our economy with proper supports and controls. I cannot see the possibility of depression such as we experienced under the last Republican administration. Our party has created safeguards. Bank depositors are insured against loss. Labor has more than trebled its average wage in this State, and workers are insured against total loss of income in case of temporary unemployment. Farmers have support prices to insure them against selling below cost of production. Reserve funds have been accumulated to maintain subsistence payments to large numbers of the aged and needy through the social-security program. Out of substantial profits in the last 8 years, business, by and large, has been able to set aside reserves against temporary reverses.

I repeat, I face the future with confidence. I face it, too, with the conviction that now is the time to build for a greater future by bringing our public services current with the needs of the times. In doing this we can set the stage for the greatest era of prosperity ever experienced by our people.

During the war and postwar years, when neither labor nor materials were available, I think our State leadership wisely husbanded tax resources. Our State is in sound fiscal position. But we cannot overlook the vital factor: In amassing a hoard of tax dollars we accumulated a vast backlog of urgent public service needs. We must conclude that we do not have a real surplus, but actually a deficit in public services. To go forward, we must wipe out this deficit.

To begin as rapidly as possible to fund this deficit of service to the people, and to do it as rapidly as the resources of the State will permit, I submit now a 15-point program to the members of this general assembly chosen by the people in our 100 counties to speak and act for them in charting the course of our State for the biennium ahead.

1. Roads: We have made great progress in road building in the last three decades. We now have more than 62,000 miles of roads, nearly 16,000 miles of them hard-surfaced, but a great part of our State still does not have all-weather transportation. In my opinion, the most inexcusable waste in our economy is the mud tax. I propose repealing the mud tax just as rapidly as it is possible to build and improve roads that will enable every school bus to operate every day in the year, and provide all-weather access to markets, places of employment, churches, and medical care.

The rounding out of our road system with a network of all-weather secondary mileage is essential to the economic as well as the cultural development of North Carolina. We are a State of thickly populated rural areas and small cities. Industry more and more is dependent upon rural and suburban labor. By improving the roads upon which this potential labor supply lives, we increase our attraction for new industry to locate here. In getting the worker to the factory, we have a service of importance almost equal to that of getting the child to school, and getting the farmer's product to market in good condition.

I am, of course, aware of the colossal nature of the task of building in 4 years a dependable school bus route system and service roads for the industry of farm and factory. It may require both an increase in the gasoline tax and borrowing money for repayment over a long period. I am giving the matter of financing this road-building program the most serious thought and I am seeking advice on it from the most competent sources I know.

The cooperation of all concerned is essential. I realize that I, as your Governor, can go no further toward achieving this objective than the general assembly and the people are willing to go along with me.

2. Education: The most valuable crop we raise in North Carolina is our children. We have so recognized this in the allocation of tax moneys on a steadily increasing scale. From 1900, when the great educational crusade began under Aycock, the State government has increased annual appropriations for public schools from $100,000 to over $63,000,000. In the last 5 years the amount has been quadrupled. For next year, our educational leaders are asking for $35,000,000 more than the State is spending on its public schools this year, and in addition a program of school building which would cost $150,000,000, spread over a period of years. The question is not whether we need to increase our expenditures for public schools, but how far we can afford to go—or not to go.

I regard a comprehensive educational program, properly implemented with road, health, and utilities programs, as the soundest insurance policy the State of North Carolina can underwrite for the protection of its future.

The general assembly of 1947 provided for a special commission to make a study of the entire public-school system. I commend the members of the commission and those who helped make this report possible, and I recommend it to this legislature as a chart to our educational future.

I urge the general assembly to take positive action toward improving and enlarging teacher personnel by increasing teacher pay. I favor a minimum salary for A-grade teachers of $2,400 and increments to encourage better qualified teachers to remain in the service. I feel that this is imperative to make the teaching profession attractive to the kind of people needed in it. We may look, as a result of the Democratic victory in the Nation, for substantial Federal aid in paying for this—possibly as much as $20,000,000 a year.

I recommend that the legislature give consideration to the establishment of a system of State aid to counties for the construction of school buildings. Any such program would require reconsideration of the State's present policy and the careful examination of the present division of the cost of public services as between ad valorem and other local taxes and the State's tax levies. We may not know, before the session of the general assembly adjourns, the extent to which Federal aid may be available for this purpose. If it is necessary, I would not hesitate to call a special session to deal with any proposals in connection with Federal aid.

I am not convinced that our system of higher education is either the best or the most economical system we can devise. We know there is a tremendous economic loss due to a number of factors such as poor preparation, poor discipline and the unfitness of many young men and women for the sort of college education we offer them. We need only to look at the high fatality rate in the first- and second-year classes in our State supported colleges to appreciate the fact that something is wrong with the system and that something needs to be done about it. The answer may be that we need to develop a system of junior colleges as a part of the greater university. I therefore recommend that the general assembly provide for a careful survey of our system of higher education in order that recommendation may be made to the next general assembly with respect to the advisability of establishing a system of junior colleges with facilities for affording vocational education.

3. Health: The importance of improving our general health program was brought sharply under the public spotlight by distressing disclosures in the selective-service physical examinations. Two administrations have grappled with this problem realistically, and the result of studies of two able commissions has been approved by the people's representatives in the last legislature. We have made progress toward placing this over-all plan into effect, and we should continue to implement it as rapidly as our resources will permit. I would guard only against any phase of this health program being overemphasized at the expense of another. Headway is now being made on the 4-year medical school and teaching hospital at the State university. This is an integral part of the program, but it cannot fulfill its mission without correlated development of rural hospitals and clinics. The encouragement of country practice for the doctor and nurse is dependent upon the availability of such modern health service stations. It is my earnest belief that this part should take precedence, if for financial reasons we are unable to carry the entire program forward at this time.

There is, also, no question as to the need of a dental school, and the proposal to build one deserves serious consideration.

Our hospitals for the mentally sick must be made adequate physically and staffed with properly trained personnel. At no time, save perhaps overnight, should a jail be the waiting room for patients requiring mental treatment.

In increasing provisions for treatment of the sick, we must not overlook the part of the medical program devoted to the prevention of sickness as carried on by the State board of health.

We are lagging in providing facilities for the treatment and prevention of tuberculosis. Farmers long ago stamped out tuberculosis among cattle. I think it is high time we showed more progress toward eradicating it in the human family.

4. Welfare: We are not current with need in our humanitarian services. The Board of Public Welfare has submitted proposals for increasing aid to the aged and indigent. These proposals affect the physical and moral health of our people. Our old-age benefits should be adjusted in line with living costs and our relief standard generally should be brought up at least to the national average. Vigilance against fraud should be increased and local communities should be encouraged to shoulder greater responsibility toward caring for those unable to care for themselves.

Great work is being done for the blind through the State blind commission and a special project of one of our largest civic clubs. This public service is to be commended in the highest terms, and might well serve as an example for other organizations of this nature.

I am concerned about the frequency of serious crimes of violence. It disturbs me to hear that a large part of the large flow of convicts into our prison system consists of ex-service men of the late war. If we are to obtain social improvement through our courts of justice, our prisons must be more than merely places for detention. There must be greater emphasis upon returning prisoners to useful places in society, and to this end we should look critically at our system of prison administration and parole and probation.

5. Natural resources: In our department of agriculture, the experiment and extension services of our agricultural colleges, and the department of conservation and development, we have the facilities for promoting the broadened economic base that is vital to our continued progress. We face challenging opportunity to improve land usage. Forestry may be restored as a major industry. Commercial fishing may be expanded, and we have untold mineral wealth awaiting development. Here, especially, I mention our ports and harbors. These are of vital concern to the entire State—not merely areas adjacent to them.

6. Public utilities: A large number of our people are being penalized by not having electric power and telephone service. Our industry has been retarded by inequitable power and transportation rates.

Electric power is the cheapest labor the farmer, as well as the manufacturer, can hire. Yet there are still around 100,000 farms in North Carolina that do not have electricity, and there are sections in which industry is being throttled because it cannot get electric power on terms that will enable it to compete with similar industries elsewhere. I want to see these service deficits wiped out during my administration.

The telephone ranks at the top of modern conveniences. Yet the surface has barely been scratched in making the instrument available to all the people. This service deficit is not only retarding rural development but constricting our whole economic and social progress by encouraging movement of our people into already congested areas. Telephone service is a natural corollary to all-weather roads and electrification. It is essential to bringing about the better health services, marketing facilities, and broadening the scope of our labor supply which industry must have.

Our utilities are privately owned and they should be permitted a reasonable return upon their investment, but to justify their monopolistic franchises granted them by the people of the State, they must also provide the service to which the people are entitled.

In the field of regulating public utilities we must have fair and aggressive administration of fair laws designed to protect the public interest as well as the interests of investors in public utilities. Our laws regulating utilities are, in some respects, cumbersome, out of date, and inadequate to meet modern conditions. Our State utilities commission needs to be reorganized and supplied with the services of experts so that it can act promptly and effectively in the public interest.

I mention specifically here the urgency of eliminating freight-rate discriminations against our industry and agriculture.

7. Democratic representation: I have stressed the importance of broadening our economic base. I lay equal stress upon broader representation on the boards and commissions which serve the public interest. I consider such broadened representation a mandate of last year's election.

You will have before you for your consideration the report of the commission set up by the preceding legislature to study our present system of State examining boards. I find widespread belief that this business has been carried beyond the bounds of public welfare. We should go slow in creating new boards and scrutinize every such board already in existence where there is the slightest indication that it is serving special privilege and restriction of opportunity.

8. Referendum: The people have the right to express themselves on any important issue affecting their well-being. Our constitution stipulates that: "Elections should be frequent. For redress of grievances and for amending and strengthening the laws, elections should be often held." I urge this legislature to present the alcoholic-beverage question fairly to the people in a State-wide referendum without delay. A gag rule, or any rule, which stifles democratic processes of free and open debate and discussion is contrary to the spirit of our people.

9. Elections: Our election laws are in some respects archaic. They are generally not conducive to bringing out the participation of the people in government. This is the keystone of democracy. I consider it a disgrace that barely one-third of the people eligible to vote in our State took part in the November election. We have permitted our processes of voting to lag behind the times, and I advocate modernization of our election machinery to the end that people will be encouraged in exercising their rights of citizenship. It is my opinion that the time has come for us to seriously consider the use of mechanical devices for the deposit and counting of ballots in all our elections.

10. Veterans: The more than 350,000 men and women who were in the armed services are now for the most part back in civil life. A great number are in positions of leadership in the State and its various localities. These men and women merit every consideration the State can show them in gratitude for their sacrifice, but I am convinced that the majority of veterans do not desire to be set apart as a special class. A great many of them have told me that, and also that the best bonus their State can grant them is better government and improved public services that will bring about better living conditions and open greater avenues of opportunity. That also is my belief.

11. Labor: No State has enjoyed better relations between labor and management than ours. We have a definite responsibility for continuing and improving these good relations. I have observed with deep satisfaction the increase in the last 10 years of the average weekly wage in industry from $16 to $41. Private business as well as public funds have felt the enriching effect of these enlarged pay rolls. We cannot have a well-balanced economy without wide distribution of buying power. A fair return for labor, whether it be in factory or on the farm, is essential to that condition.

Two years ago the general assembly enacted the so-called anti-closed-shop law. This was done at a time when labor's demands at the national level were influencing lawmakers all over the Nation to pass restraining legislation. I feel that the passage of time has convinced those willing to look upon both sides of this question that this law was harsh, and I recommend revision of this and other State labor laws to bring them in line with legislation adopted by the National Congress. I specifically recommend wage-hour legislation to remove discrimination as between business engaged in interstate commerce and business engaged solely in business within the State.

I also favor increasing unemployment benefits to a level in keeping with advanced living costs. I am informed that we can do this and at the same time lower the tax levied on business for this purpose.

12. Business and industry: The rapidly advancing industrialization of our State is responsible in large measure for our unprecedented prosperity in recent years. Our goal should be an economy soundly diversified between agriculture and industry. We can increase our attraction to industry by broadening our supply of competent labor through better training in our schools and better accessibility and communications, so that labor can be drawn from extended areas and not be confined to urban limits. Tax structures are important, and we should guard against our taxes on industry getting out of line with those of competing States, but even more important than the tax consideration is the supply of labor and natural resources. We have both awaiting development. This will become increasingly important as the dispersion of industry is accelerated by the atomic age.

I am opposed to any legislation unduly favoring or discriminating against any form of legitimate business enterprise.

Business in the last decade has built up a great bulwark against repetition of the panic of the early thirties by its contributions to the unemployment-compensation fund. There are now more than $150,000,000 in this fund and about 1,000,000 workers are covered in North Carolina. Payments from this fund are not large enough to encourage idleness, but they serve to tide workers, and the businesses dependent upon industrial pay rolls, over periods of temporary inactivity without danger of economic paralysis. This danger was ever-present before the establishment of the social-security plan.

In view of the large reserves accumulated in the unemployment fund, I feel that business should be given all the relief possible in reduction of this assessment, and recommend serious consideration of the proposal to this end made by the employment security advisory commission. As I have already mentioned, I am informed that this reduction can be made and at the same time unemployment benefits can be increased more in line with present living costs.

13. Personnel: The State cannot render services commensurate with the needs of its people, nor in fair exchange for the tax moneys it collects, without able and adequate personnel. This is true in every branch and division of our Government. To attract and retain personnel capable of rendering the services to which the taxpayers are entitled, compensation for public service must be reasonably commensurate with salaries and wages prevailing in competitive enterprise, both public and private. Our salary and wage scales do not at this time reflect such a condition. We should now raise these scales with a view to compensating for increased living costs with an equitable retroactive adjustment.

The State has lagged behind industry in personnel management, and should remedy this condition immediately. To this end I recommend removal of the duties of personnel administration from the office of the assistant director of the budget to a new personnel division under the direction of a specialist in this field. This office should proceed without delay to survey the whole field of State employment and to make revisions and adjustments that are needed as rapidly as possible. This office, too, must always be open to any State employee for hearing and investigation of any complaint regarding terms or conditions of employment by the State.

14. Local government: Cities and counties are reporting budgetary difficulties as expenses increase without commensurate increase of their revenues. There is a growing tendency to appeal to the State government for aid. At the same time, criticism arises in some quarters against the concentration of political power at the State capital. During the campaign there was a confusing mingling of the two ideas—that the central State should take on more financial responsibility for local government, and that it should restore to local government some of its powers.

This discussion, spurred on primarily by the municipalities, strongly suggests that the time has come for very careful study of the whole framework of North Carolina's government. The record of the concentration of power and financial responsibility at Raleigh shows little evidence in support of the theory that the State government sought to take on new power for the sake of exercise of the power itself. Usually, fiscal circumstances led to willing surrender of authority to the State by local governments as they struggled with problems such as roads and schools.

In the course of this political evolution, the areas of taxation occupied by the State, as compared with those areas left to local government, have been clearly defined in some instances. In other instances they have been loosely indicated with some overlapping. The State gave up ad valorem taxation of real property and restricted local government in certain other areas. The time is near, if not immediately at hand, when we must make a critical survey of our situation with a view to determining more definitely and expertly how the costs of government should be divided. This thinking leads inevitably to consideration of the haphazard, uneven valuation of property in the counties and cities for ad valorem levies.

The mercurial character of the State's tax levies, as well as the mounting costs of State services under the present constitutional and statutory responsibilities demand that we deliberate with great care all proposals to load the central State with large new obligations at the instance of local government. I say this while recognizing, with sympathy and understanding, that local government is entitled to the best we can do in equity and fairness to afford relief.

I have suggested the surrender by the State of a limited portion of the tax field wherein revenue now is derived from business licenses without State supervision or service of the business so licensed. By release of this revenue source to local government under statutory limitation, substantial local government aid could be provided. I am recommending, also, that the road-maintenance funds allocated to city streets be doubled.

Knowing that greater demands will be made upon the legislature for aid of local government, including the demand that the State help with the construction of needed school buildings, I trust that the general assembly wil confide to a special committee or a subcommittee the duty to make a prompt study of this pressing problem. I hope that this will be done early in the session, in order that all legislative proposals for new aid to local government may be scrutinized and acted upon with an eye not only to immediate needs, but also to long-range policy.

15. Federal cooperation: We are now receiving millions of dollars each year from the Federal Government in our road, school, health, and other programs. This aid may be increased. We should take full advantage of it. We have the campaign pledge of the Democratic Party that such Federal aid will be extended without interference with State administration in accordance with custom.

Some of these proposals I have outlined involve a substantial increase in spending, but the people understood that when they enccuraged me in my campaign. I have not and do not now minimize the cost of the major items in this go-forward program.

We know from experience that these things cannot be had cheaply. We know from experience, too, that social progress cannot far outrun material progress.

Our tax income is now at the highest place in our history, but we have little assurance that our revenues will continue to climb as they have climbed in recent years. Our sales, income, and utility taxes are extremely sensitive to economic conditions. They mount rapidly in good times. They could drop rapidly in adverse times. We must bear that in mind as we match our spending against revenue.

There are certain injustices in our present general tax schedule. I have pledged my support to their removal. These include abandonment of the present sales tax on meals served in public eating places in order to place such meals on tax equality with those served at home. This would complete the movement begun several years ago of taking the sales tax off all food. I also advocate the equalization of the sales tax upon farm machinery and industrial machinery. These recommendations would entail some loss of revenue. To keep our budget in balance, and it is imperative that we do so, we are faced with the need to obtain good value for our tax dollars in every case.

This will mean, aside from improving administrative efficiency wherever possible, the winnowing of services merely desirable from those urgently necessary.

The program of permanent improvements authorized by the general assembly of 1947 has scarcely been started because of the constantly increasing building costs. It is manifest that this program should be completed and the additional funds necessary should be provided. With respect to further permanent improvements at our various State institutions, it is necessary that the need be evaluated realistically and in relation to other needs. It is my belief that money we invest in better roads and in better schools and in better health facilities will go further and faster, in the immediate future, toward creating new taxable wealth and in social well-being essential to the progress our people desire. I have, therefore, placed roads, schools, and health first.

A go-forward program calls first for long-range planning.

Every farmer will not get his all-weather road as soon as he would like it, and every community will not get a modern hospital this year. New and needed school buildings will not spring up everywhere immediately, and new factories will not rise in every community.

We are a great State, and a large State. We have over 3,500,000 people and nearly 32,000,000 acres of land and inland waters. We are inclined to judge a program by what is transpiring at our doorstep. Some will see the things I am advocating materialize sooner than others. Some must inevitably wonder at the slowness of their government to get to them.

But this I pledge: With the cooperation of the legislature, the things I have promised will be done in an orderly manner and as rapidly as our resources will permit. We will make North Carolina, in the 4 years ahead, a better place in which to live, in which to invest, and in which to play after the work is done.

To do this we must bring our over-all efficiency current with the times. Governments can no more maintain a competitive position with methods of a decade ago than can industry. Where I see our government in a rut I shall do everything in my power to get it out. If this means reorganization or even abolition of time-honored practices, I shall not hesitate to recommend such changes as appear in the public interest.

Nor shall I hesitate to slash red tape or push aside tradition if it is necessary to eliminate bottlenecks.

Government should never be remote. The people are entitled to know what is going on. It is my purpose to go on the radio from time to time and make first-hand reports of my stewardship. I shall also make information about our Government available as fully and completely as possible through the reporters of press and radio. Secrecy has no place in a people's government.

I come into office with no skeletons in my closet, and I shall strive zealously to see that none creep into the State's closets while I am Governor.

The door to the Governor's office will continue to be open during my administration.

I am most acutely aware of the fact that both the office of the Governor in the capitol and the executive mansion, and all the institutions and departments of government belong to you—the people—not to me whom you have designated as tenant in the office of Governor for the next 4 years.

In conclusion, I would not be speaking with candor if I did not say in no uncertain terms that I am proud of the progress made by our State under the guidance of a long line of distinguished men who have served as governor during the past 50 years.

I have had the opportunity of serving the State in the administration of our last four Governors—Ehringhaus, Hoey, Broughton, and Cherry. I cherish the opportunity to carry on the high tradition of public service established by my predecessors. I know that you ladies and gentlemen of this general assembly also succeed a long line of patriotic citizens who have served the State faithfully as members of the legislatures which have been the authors of the State's charter of progress. The record of our predecessors is a challenge to us to work shoulder to shoulder in the interest of all our people.

Let's go forward.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, on the first legislative day following the receipt of the budget, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative business of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include in one a speech delivered by Assistant Secretary of the Navy Brown and in the other an address delivered by General Kenney.

Mr. JACOBS (at the request of Mr. HALLECK) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEMKE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter from Norbert O'Leary which appeared in the Daily Telegram of Garden City, Kans.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include extraneous matter.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a very fine article appearing in the Boston Herald of November 28 with regard to our distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. BLOOM].

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE ON RULES

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of correcting an honest but erroneous impression that many newspapers, and particularly editorial writers, throughout the country seem to have, and that even some of our own Members did have, with regard to the meaning and effect of the amendment liberalizing the rules that the House adopted last Monday.

I have read a number of editorials, and all that I have read are favorable to this change in the rules, but most of them indicate that they feel the Speaker has the power to recognize or not to recognize when the chairman of a committee, on the day on which it is in order to call up motions to discharge committees, rises to call up a rule that has been in the Committee on Rules for 21 days or more or that has been reported adversely by that committee. That is an honest but incorrect impression.

The amendment liberalizing the rules makes it mandatory that the Speaker recognize the chairman of a committee under such circumstances. The language of the amendment is, "and the Speaker shall recognize the Member seeking recognition for that purpose as a question of the highest privilege."

Therefore, recognition under these circumstances is not a question of discretion with the Speaker.

May I say that the Speaker and I did not consider that proposition even for a minute. We would not consider that as a liberalizing amendment.

The two plans under consideration were the Eberharter plan and the proposal that a smaller number of signatures be required on a motion to discharge the Committee on Rules from further consideration of a rule providing for the consideration of a public bill reported out of a committee.

But the agreement was to recognize the chairman of a committee. Where there has been a noncompliance by the Committee on Rules with the rule as amended, the chairman of the committee, as a matter of right, can rise and be recognized. My purpose now is to correct that honest but erroneous impression.

The newspapers of the country and the editorial writers and others who are interested will know that this is really an effective liberalizing amendment.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, I yield to my friend.

Mr. HALLECK. In order to add to the clarification of the situation, would it be in order to say that under this new arrangement any measure that is reported out by a legislative committee and which then goes to the Committee on Rules may be called up on the floor of the House even against the majority sentiment of the Committee on Rules or the sentiment of the leadership itself?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, the gentleman is referring to any public measure.

Mr. HALLECK. Yes; I am referring to any public measure.

Mr. McCORMACK. In reply to the gentleman's statement, the answer is "Yes." The rule applies both ways. The rule applies to a situation where any public bill has been reported out of the standing committee and a rule has been applied for and the Committee on Rules fails to act within 21 days or should report adversely, which, of course, is a rare occurrence, but that language had to be included in order to cover that possibility. Then on any discharge petition day the chairman of a standing committee could rise and call that rule up just as any member of the Committee on Rules can now do after a rule has been reported out for more than 7 days. That is part of the rules, and we are simply extending the same privilege or, rather, the same right—not a privilege—to the chairman of a standing committee where the Committee on Rules fails to act in 21 days, just as any member of the Committee on Rules now has that right when a rule is reported out and has not been programed for the consideration of the House by the majority leader within 7 days.

Of course, as my friend knows, in practical operation the chairman of a committee would come to me as majority leader and ask me to program it, just as members of the Committee on Rules would come to me if they desired that a bill should be called up after the expiration of 7 days. I am sure that Members have come to my distinguished friend during the time that he was majority leader, in similar situations. I am sure they would come to the leadership to see about programing any proposed legislation before exercising the high privilege that is now theirs under the rules as amended.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. HALLECK. I sincerely hope for the sake of the Treasury of the United States, in view of the wish expressed by the President of the United States that we achieve a balanced budget and have a surplus to pay on the national debt, that the prophecy of the gentleman from Massachusetts as to what will transpire will prove to be correct, because under the gentleman's explanation as to the effect of this rule the legislative committee is in complete control of the situation and may bring any measure to the floor of the House without regard to the wishes of the leadership or of the Committee on Rules. As a matter of fact, committees often direct and require their chairman to press for passage of bills he does not favor personally. May I say further to the gentleman that in my service in the House of Representatives under the leadership of the able gentleman from Massachusetts and preceding leaders of Democratic Congresses, and at one time in my capacity as leader of the majority in the House, I know that bills aggregating billions and billions of dollars which would have completely bankrupted the country have not come to the floor of the House because it was decided by the responsible leaders that they should not come to the floor for consideration. I realize the great wish of so many people to liberalize the rules of the House and to bring everything to the floor of the House. But the gentleman knows as well as I do that many of those very bills will get practically a unanimous vote if they come to the floor.

May I say again, hoping that we do not run headlong into bankruptcy, that the gentleman and his colleagues in the leadership will be able to control the situation indirectly, having completely destroyed the power of the Rules Committee in respect to bills coming to the floor.

Mr. McCORMACK. My friend the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] has been proceeding upon and reacting to fear for 16 years. It is very evident that the gentleman is still proceeding upon fear. This is a rule effectively liberalizing the rules of the House, and I compliment the 49 Republicans who joined with the Democrats in that action. I was very sorry to see the Republican leadership make a test of this on the first day. They have to take the responsibility for the test on liberalizing the rule, where we will be able to carry out the will of the House and not be frustrated by six men who may be assigned to the Rules Committee.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, January 10, 1949, at 12 o'clock noon.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY THE CENTRAL NEBRASKA BEET GROWERS ASSOCIATION RELATING TO ACREAGE OF SUGAR BEETS, ETC.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference resolutions adopted at a recent meeting of the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association, and I ask unanimous consent that they be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED AT THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE CENTRAL NEBRASKA BEET GROWERS' ASSOCIATION, DECEMBER 7, 1948

Resolution 1

Whereas a reasonable acreage of sugar beets is essential to a proper rotation program in the central Nebraska area; and

Whereas an early agreement upon contract terms would aid in promoting a large acreage of sugar beets: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the board of directors be directed to request the officials of the American Crystal Sugar Co. to give consideration to the 1949 marketing contract immediately after the results of the cost survey being conducted by the Sugar Section of the Department of Agriculture are made available.

Resolution 2

Be it resolved upon condition that a fair and equitable marketing contract for 1949 is agreed upon between the American Crystal Sugar Co. and the directors of this association that the board of directors be instructed to offer to the factory officials all facilities of the association to assist in securing a normal acreage of sugar beets and a representative number of growers in all parts of the factory district.

Resolution 3

Be it resolved, That the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association express its appreciation to the American Crystal Sugar Co. for its cooperation in the collection of association dues and in permitting the use of its facilities by the association chemist.

Resolution 4

Whereas many prospective sugar-beet growers are hesitant about contracting beet acreage until a determination of labor rates has been made: Be it therefore

Resolved, That the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association urge the Department of Agriculture to make an early determination and release the findings on labor rates by January 1, 1949.

Resolution 5

Whereas both the growers of sugar beets and the sugar processors are at a disadvantage in negotiating a marketing contract without full information as to production costs and consumptive estimate for the ensuing year: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association, That we request the Department of Agriculture to make public not later than January 1, 1949, the 1949 consumptive estimate and the results of the cost survey which has been carried on by the Sugar Section of the Department of Agriculture.

Resolution 6

Be it resolved by the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association, That the board of directors be instructed to request closer cooperation between the factory officials and the association in regard to the recruitment and employment and compensation of free labor.

Resolution 7

Be it resolved, That the American Crystal Sugar Co. be requested to make available to the members of the association all pertinent data obtained from the operation of their fertilizer and seed experimentation plots in this area, and we express our commendation of the factory for carrying on these experiments in the central Nebraska area.

Resolution 8

Be it resolved, That the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association again request from the American Crystal Sugar Co. that individual soil analysis be provided for the growers as a guide in selecting proper fertilizer.

Resolution 9

Be it resolved by the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association, That the factory officials be requested to establish closer cooperation with the growers on harvesting methods and conditions.

Resolution 10

Be it resolved, That the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association express its appreciation to the National Beet Growers' Federation for its services in behalf of the beet growers in matters of Federal legislation, and that the directors of this association be instructed to continue the affiliation of the association with the National Beet Growers' Federation during the ensuing year.

Resolution 11

Whereas the available supply of free Mexican labor will not be adequate for the care and harvesting of the 1949 sugar-beet crops: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association, That we urge the Department of Agriculture to attempt to make Mexican national labor available for the 1949 season.

Resolution 12

Whereas our Nebraska Senators and Congressmen rendered invaluable service to the sugar-beet growers in the adoption of sugar legislation in the past session of Congress: Be it therefore

Resolved by the Central Nebraska Beet Growers' Association, That we express our sincere appreciation to our Nebraska Senators and Congressmen for their fine support of the sugar-beet growers in matters of national legislation.

RESOLUTIONS ADOPTED BY NORTH DAKOTA FARM BUREAU RELATING TO SOIL CONSERVATION, ETC.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference resolutions which were adopted at the sixth annual convention of the North Dakota Farm Bureau. The resolutions deal specifically with soil conservation, submarginal land soil conservation, irrigation, consolidation of Government farm service agencies, sugar commodity storage, the parity program, research, the wheat agreement, surplus versus reserves, farm credit, rural electrification, and roads and highways. I do not request that the remaining resolutions, which deal with State problems, be included. I ask unanimous consent that the resolutions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOIL CONSERVATION

Be it resolved: Realizing that the welfare of the people of North Dakota is dependent upon the soil and its productivity, and that soil conservation and prevention of soil erosion is of the utmost importance and that in recent years there have been instances of soil sacrifice in efforts to meet the demand for farm products, the North Dakota Farm Bureau recommends an accelerated soil-conservation program through the extension service of the North Dakota Agricultural College, by cooperation with other State and Federal agencies interested in soil conservation, by the encouragement of good farming practices and by a soil-conservation educational program among the people of our State.

SUBMARGINAL LAND SOIL CONSERVATION

Be it resolved, That the North Dakota Farm Bureau favors an extensive soil-conservation program designed particularly for submarginal land in North Dakota.

IRRIGATION

Be it resolved, That inasmuch as the growing season in North Dakota is shorter than in more southern areas in the United States and is a one-season program, and inasmuch as the crops suitable to our climate and soil require larger acreages to be a profitable enterprise than crops such as fruits, which are grown in more southern or western areas, it is urged that the American Farm Bureau Federation support a plan on irrigation for North Dakota which will permit irrigation tracts of sufficient size to be a profitable enterprise, and to make a good economic unit.

CONSOLIDATION OF GOVERNMENT FARM SERVICE AGENCIES

Be it resolved, in the interests of rendering the best service to the farmers of North Dakota, it is recommended that the Soil Conservation Service and Production Marketing Administration be consolidated into one governmental agency.

SUGAR

Whereas under existing law the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States sets a consumptive estimate on sugar consumption within the United States upon which import quantities are determined causing an effect upon market prices for sugar: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, that the Secretary of Agriculture be urged to set said consumptive estimate, consistent with the facts so that the prices paid for the raising of sugar crops and the profits therefrom, compare favorably with the prices and profits paid for the raising of other farm crops; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Honorable Charles Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

COMMODITY STORAGE

Be it resolved: 1. That the farmers of North Dakota be encouraged to use existing storage facilities and to provide additional storage facilities for the storing of grain on farms as a sound business and farming practice and as a stabilizing factor on grain markets;

2. That legislation be enacted enabling and empowering the Commodity Credit Corporation to maintain sufficient storage facilities to protect their own operations and maintain a reserve of farm products to meet national emergencies; be it further

Resolved: 1. That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Honorable Fred G. Aandahl, Governor of the State of North Dakota, the Honorable Charles Brannan, Secretary of Agriculture, and to the congressional delegation from North Dakota at Washington, D. C.

PARITY PROGRAM

Be it resolved: That the North Dakota Farm Bureau go on record favoring continuance of parity for agriculture and that we instruct our Representatives and Senators in Congress to work for the continuance of the AIKEN or long-range agricultural program of 1948 to fully protect agriculture.

RESEARCH

Be it resolved: We urge that the American Farm Bureau Federation exercise vigilance as to the progress made in the administration of the Research and Marketing Act in order that the funds appropriated may be expended wisely and to the best interests of agriculture. We believe that research should be made on major items rather than on minor items and that studies should be made for the development of new outlets for agricultural productions. We further recommend that the North Dakota Farm Bureau set up an appropriate committee to study the matter of finding new uses for small grains and for products derived therefrom and to determine what plan might be feasible for the North Dakota Farm Bureau to adopt further such research. It is further recommended that as a matter of policy, the producer should assist in bearing the cost of research in the development of new market outlets for the products which he produces.

WHEAT AGREEMENT

Be it resolved, That the North Dakota Farm Bureau recommends a thorough study of the International Wheat Agreement be made on both county and State levels so that the public may be more conversant with this matter when and if it should again come before our Congress.

SURPLUS VERSUS RESERVES

The Government of the United States has justly and properly assumed world leadership. Billions have been invested in military personnel together with the most powerful Navy, Air Force, etc., in the world.

The fruits of these huge investments are not labeled "surpluses," but are properly termed instruments of defense.

While this building program is being carried on this Nation's producers of foodstuff are engaged in producing the most bounteous harvests on record, which are so essential at this time in building and keeping the peace of the world.

While the American farmer appreciates the cooperation on the part of our Government in its efforts to support farm prices, these very necessary supports are distasteful to the American consumer at this time of inflated values. They feel that the Government, while trying to control inflation on the one hand, is on the other hand, by supporting farm commodity prices, in the face of commodify surpluses, unnecessarily holding prices up.

The heroic efforts on the part of the American farmer promise to build immense reserves, which we fear may lower farm commodity prices, reduce the farmers' buying power, and destroy that economic balance upon which our country's prosperity depends.

America's economy is faced with the possibility of commodity surpluses on the one hand and consumer resistance on the other hand, which conditions could result in monetary loss to our Government in its program to support commodity prices at reasonable levels.

We feel that our Government should regard food as an instrument for defense just as much as our Army, Navy, and Air Force, and it should acquire a great store of farm commodities while such commodities are available and hold it for use in national emergencies.

Such action on the part of our Government would not only remove possible future commodity surpluses and accompanying consumer resistance resulting in Government loss, but would create another powerful arm in our national defense program.

Such action on the part of our Government would also serve the double purpose of removing the pressure of commodity surpluses from our price supports and would also act as a guaranty against food shortage in case of war or crop shortages in future years.

It would also have a stabilizing effect on commodity markets which in turn would reflect stability to our consumer markets: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Government be requested to acquire and hold a large reserve of farm commodities to be used only in case of national emergencies.

FARM CREDIT

Be it resolved, That inasmuch as there are no adequate credit facilities available in the State of North Dakota for the purchase of farms and to enable persons to begin farming operations, and inasmuch as the Federal land bank makes loans in other States; and inasmuch as such loans are based primarily on the security interest in such land, the North Dakota Farm Bureau urges that the Federal land bank resume making North Dakota farm loans under existing North Dakota laws; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be sent to the Secretary of Agriculture at Washington, D. C.; to the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration at Washington, D. C.; and to the Honorable Fred G. Aandahl, Governor of the State of North Dakota, and to the North Dakota congressional delegation at Washington, D. C.

MORE DEMOCRACY

Whereas the selection of the PMA State committeemen is not democratic; be it

Resolved, That the people of our State be allowed to select their own. We would recommend that one be elected from each judicial district by the members of each district.

REA

Be it resolved, The North Dakota Farm Bureau reaffirms the stand that it has previously taken that it is solidly in favor of the extension of REA electric service within North Dakota. As of this time, REA electric service has been extended to only a small fraction of the farms in North Dakota. It is, therefore, urged that Congress and all governmental agencies make available the funds necessary and expedite the extension of REA electric service so as to make electrical service available to the greatest number of farms in North Dakota at the earliest possible time; be it further

Resolved, That the American Farm Bureau make every effort to defeat any proposed legislation which would give private power companies control of the power developed at Government dams and that REA cooperatives, governmental agencies, and municipalities be given first priority on said power.

A copy of this resolution to be sent to Claude Wickard, REA Administrator, Washington, D. C., all North Dakota Congressmen, and REA officials of the State.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS

Be it resolved:

1. That the North Dakota Farm Bureau favors the centralization of all highway location and construction, in each county, under the supervision of a county administrative engineer. Said county administrative engineer shall have the duty of supervising and cooperating with county and township officers in the location, construction, and maintenance of all roads within the county. In the cases of State or Federal roads running through said counties, such administrative engineer shall cooperate with State and Federal officials and with the administrative engineer and officials of the adjoining counties.

2. That the North Dakota Farm Bureau establish a county road committee in each county who shall have the duty to consult with the county administrative engineer, the county and township officials, and with State and Federal officials concerning road matters, and in matters involving more than one county. Said county road committee of the counties involved shall consult and work with each other and with the county engineer and county, township, State, and Federal officials involved. The manner of selection of said county committee, the number of persons thereon, and the terms of office shall be determined by the county farm bureau.

ENLISTMENT OF ALIENS IN REGULAR ARMY

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I reintroduce for appropriate reference, in modified form, a proposal which the Senate passed last year; authorizing the Army to enlist up to 25,000 qualified aliens, and I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD a brief statement I have prepared which presents in succinct form the reason for my introducing the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts will be appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 273) to provide for the enlistment of aliens in the Regular Army, introduced by Mr. LODGE, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

The statement presented by Mr. LODGE is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LODGE

This simple proposal permits the Army (with the concurrence of the Secretary of State) to accept up to 25,000 enlistments from young men of different nationalities between the ages of 18 and 35. It authorizes the Army to conduct this experiment for a 2-year period. The number 25,000 represents about 7 percent of the total of our Regular Army and is an amount which qualified experts believe can be effectively absorbed. These men would serve for 5 years, after which they would be eligible for American citizenship. They could be used wherever the Army found it desirable, and I believe that it is the Army's intention to use them initially in Alaska, the Caribbean, and the Far East.

This bill is similar to the amendment I offered last year to the Selective Service Act and which the Senate approved on a roll-call vote. I was disappointed when it was dropped from the act during the conference with the House and I hope that it will fare better this time.

Some of the points which should be emphasized at this time in connection with this plan are:

1. It is of enormous potential value to our national defense. We receive, in return for the benefits conferred, human talent which we can obtain in no other way and which the experiences of World War II, in our relations with friendly foreign troops, prove beyond question that we must have for training, combat, liaison, and intelligence.

2. It does not contemplate any sort of foreign legion at all. These young foreign soldiers would be scattered as individuals throughout all Army units. They would not be isolated in separate organizations or wear any kind of distinctive insignia. They would wear regular GI uniforms and would live in intimate daily contact with other young Americans.

3. The literally hundreds of letters which I have received from young men all over the world show that this plan has captured the interest and enthusiasm of the cream of young manhood abroad. We could expect fine human material. Of course, the initial screening of applicants would be highly exacting and discriminating; continuous supervision during the entire term of enlistment would likewise be aggressive. This is certainly more thorough than anything of which our immigration and naturalization services are normally capable.

4. It is neither a sign of weakness nor a radical policy for the United States to welcome allies in American uniform. Foreign soldiers have fought and given their lives for the United States from the Revolutionary War through the Civil War down to World War II. My plan simply seeks to substitute an orderly legislative long-range program for the old hit-or-miss method.

5. This proposal is truly one for the benefit of the United States. It is not a "hand-out." It is no cold-blooded hiring of mercenaries. It is an honorable exchange whereby both parties benefit—and therein, I think, lies its special strength.

6. Of overriding importance is the fact that there are millions of people the world over who look to the United States as the guardian of democracy. It is only right that the young and able-bodied men among these people should have the privilege of helping us carry the torch. For many reasons, they cannot put their armies into the field. But their young men can help as individual allies and should be enabled to do so. We have gone to great lengths and much trouble and expense in order to leave no stone unturned to have as many allies as possible in this troubled world. This is yet another way in which to secure more friends—this time an ally in the uniform of the United States Army.

INCOME LIMITATION GOVERNING GRANTING OF PENSIONS TO CERTAIN VETERANS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill providing for upward revision of income limitations affecting the entitlement to pensions of disabled veterans of World War I and the widows of such men. A measure similar to this bill was considered in the Eightieth Congress as H. R. 4242. It was reported from the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, but, unfortunately, did not receive further action. I am, however, hoping that such action will be forthcoming in this Eighty-first Congress. This is one of the bills on the comprehensive legislative program for veterans' and widows' welfare of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, whose distinguished national legislative representative is Mr. Omar B. Ketchum, past national commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The bill (S. 325) to amend the income limitation governing the granting of pension to veterans and death-pension benefits to widows and children of veterans, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENT OF CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the creation of a consolidated international air carrier for the United States, and for other purposes. In this bill I am joined by the able Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER]. I ask that the bill be printed in full in the body of the RECORD, and that a statement prepared by me in connection therewith be printed immediately thereafter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill and the statement presented by the Senator from Nevada will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 327) to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the creation of a consolidated international air carrier for the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. McCARRAN (for himself and Mr. BREWSTER), was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A bill to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the merger and the consolidation of international air carriers for the United States, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"TITLE XII—CONSOLIDATION AND MERGER OF INTERNATIONAL AIR CARRIERS

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 1201. As used in this title—

"(1) The term 'domestic air carrier' means any air carrier, the major portion of whose traffic and revenues from common-carrier business is derived from domestic air transportation.

"(2) The term 'international air carrier' means any air carrier, the major portion of whose traffic and revenues from common-carrier business is derived from international air transportation.

"(3) The term 'consolidated carrier' means the international air carrier which acquires or operates properties and facilities unified and integrated by consolidation or merger pursuant to this title.

"(4) The term 'domestic air transportation' means the carriage by aircraft of persons or property as a common carrier for compensation or hire, or the carriage of mail by aircraft, in commerce, between points in the United States, or between a point in the United States and a point in Canada.

"(5) The term 'international air transportation' means the carriage by aircraft of persons or property as a common carrier for compensation or hire, or the carriage of mail by aircraft, in commerce, between any point in the United States and any point in a foreign country other than Canada.

"(6) The term 'consolidation or merger' includes the legal consolidation or merger of two or more corporations and the acquisition by a corporation through purchase, lease, or in any other manner, of the whole or any part of the property, securities, facilities, services, or business of any other corporation or corporations, or of the control thereof, in exchange for its own securities or otherwise.

"(7) The term 'continental United States' means the several States and the District of Columbia. The term 'United States' has the meaning set forth in section 1 (31).

"(8) The term 'Board' means the Civil Aeronautics Board.

"(9) The term 'flight equipment' shall include in addition to aircraft, engines, and propellers.

"DECLARATION OF PUBLIC INTEREST

"SEC. 1202. It is hereby declared that the interests of the commerce of the United States, the national defense and the postal service require that the United States shall have a system of international air transportation (a) sufficient to carry a substantial portion of its own international air commerce commensurate with the large proportion of such air commerce originated by it, to obtain a fair share of air commerce between other nations of the world, and to provide it with air communications on all routes essential to the national interest; (b) capable of serving as an aid to its military forces in time of war or national emergency, both directly and as a source of trained personnel; (c) owned and operated under the United States flag by citizens of the United States; and (d) composed of the most modern, safest, and most suitable types of aircraft constructed in the United States and manned with citizens thereof; and that, in order to foster the development and encourage the maintenance of such a system of international air transportation, it is necessary to avoid destructive rivalries between American companies abroad and to present a united American front against the competition of foreign air monopolies. It is therefore declared to be the policy of the United States that its international air transportation should be consolidated into a single company, to be formed under a plan approved or prescribed by the Board, which shall operate in the national interest under private ownership and management as a public utility under regulation by the Board.

"CONSOLIDATION OR MERGER OF INTERNATIONAL AIR CARRIERS

"SEC. 1203. (a) Within 60 days from the date of enactment of this section, or such longer period not exceeding 90 days from the date of enactment of this section as the Board may determine, one or more international air carriers or domestic air carriers engaged in international air transportation may file with the Board a proposed plan of consolidation or merger. Upon the filing of any such plan, the Board shall transmit a copy thereof to the President and to the Policy Committee hereafter named, and shall order a public hearing to be held with respect thereto, and shall give reasonable notice of such hearing in writing and an opportunity to be heard to any person whose properties are affected by the plan and to such other persons as the Board may deem advisable. If no such plan is filed within the period above specified, the Board shall as soon as practicable thereafter issue a proposed plan of consolidation or merger and shall transmit a copy thereof to the President and to the Policy Committee hereafter named, and shall order a public hearing to be held with respect thereto and shall give reasonable notice of such hearing and an opportunity to be heard as aforesaid.

"(b) Any proposed plan filed with or issued by the Board under subsection (a) of this section shall include the following provisions and may include such other provisions as shall be appropriate:

"(1) A statement that the consolidated carrier will acquire, by the issuance of an appropriate amount of its ordinary common stock, all of the assets, or all of the outstanding stock, of all international air carriers existing on the effective date of the plan, and, if the assets of such carriers are to be acquired, that the consolidated carrier will assume the liabilities of such carriers existing on the effective date of the plan;

"(2) A statement that the consolidated carrier will acquire the following:

"(i) All real estate and ground equipment owned by domestic air carriers which is located outside the continental United States and is used or held for use by such air carriers in international air transportation on the effective date of the plan;

"(ii) Any stock, notes, or other securities or evidences of indebtedness of any person engaged in any phase of aeronautics in a foreign country which are owned by any air carrier or person controlling an air carrier on the effective date of the plan, except that the plan need not provide for the acquisition by the consolidated carrier of any such stock, notes, or other securities or evidences of indebtedness acquired by an air carrier or person controlling an air carrier after October 25, 1945;

"(iii) Flight equipment owned by any domestic air carrier which on the effective date of the plan is primarily used or held for use in international air transportation or has been committed for by such a carrier primarily for such use, and such additional flight equipment owned or committed for by any domestic air carrier on the effective date of the plan so that the total flight equipment purchasable under this clause (iii) will constitute an amount of the flight equipment of any domestic air carrier engaged in international air transportation fairly representing the proportion of such flight equipment used in or committed for international air transportation, to such extent as any such domestic air carrier may request within a reasonable time to be fixed by the Board in its order approving the plan.

In any case where property is to be acquired by the consolidated carrier pursuant to this clause (2) directly from a person entitled to subscribe for carrier shares, the purchase price shall be payable in such shares and the right of such person to subscribe for such shares shall be reduced accordingly: Provided, That the carrier shares so issuable upon such purchase shall not exceed 3 percent of the proposed initial common stock capitalization of the consolidated carrier and any amount by which the purchase price shall exceed said 3 percent shall be payable either in cash or in notes of the consolidated carrier maturing not later than 2 years from the effective date of the plan and bearing interest at 3 percent per annum, or partly in cash and partly in such notes.

"(3) A statement as to the proposed initial capitalization of the consolidated carrier.

"(4) The form of charter of the consolidated carrier, which may be a charter under the laws of any one of the United States, and the form of bylaws of the consolidated carrier.

"(5) Provisions for the offer for subscription (i) to all domestic air carriers, (ii) to all citizens of the United States who are common carriers by water in foreign commerce or in commerce between the continental United States and a territory or possession of the United States, as defined in the Shipping Act, 1916, and (iii) to all class I carriers by railroad subject to the Interstate Commerce Act (other than terminal and switching companies and carriers which are not citizens of the United States as defined in this act), of three special series of common stock of the consolidated carrier (hereinafter referred to as 'carrier shares'). The series of carrier shares to be so offered to domestic air carriers shall constitute approximately 25 percent of the proposed initial common-stock capitalization of the consolidated carrier, the series of carrier shares to be so offered to citizens of the United States who are common carriers by water, as above defined, shall contribute approximately 20 percent of the said proposed initial common-stock capitalization, and the series of carrier shares to be so offered to class I carriers by railroad, as above defined, shall constitute approximately 10 percent of the said proposed initial common-stock capitalization. Such shares shall be allotted within each of the three classes on a fair and equitable basis which shall take account of the gross revenues and net worth of the respective members of each class, and other relevant facts, subject, however, to the provisions of subsection (b) (2) of this section and of section 1204 (a). The plan shall contain appropriate provisions (1) fixing a reasonable time of not less than 6 months within which carriers initially entitled to subscribe to carrier shares shall elect as to the extent to which they desire to avail themselves of their subscription rights and providing that the consolidated carrier may call for the payment of such subscriptions over a period of not less than 6 months nor more than 1 year from the date of such election; (2) stating what disposition, if any, shall be made of shares not so subscribed for; (3) establishing that if the consolidated carrier shall from time to time issue additional common stock (except where such stock is issued for property, services, or to employees of the consolidated carrier) each of the classes of persons herein specified as entitled to subscribe to a proportion of the shares originally issued shall be entitled to subscribe for a like proportion of such newly issued shares, the allotment of such newly issued shares within each class to be based upon the facts existing at the date of such new issue without regard to the amount of shares then actually held by any member of such class; (4) restricting the transferability of carrier shares; and (5) providing for representation of the holders of each of the special series of carrier shares upon the board of directors of the consolidated carrier: Provided, That the total number of directors provided to represent each of said special series of carrier shares shall approximate the proportionate amount of common stock of the consolidated carrier represented by such series.

"(6) Fair and equitable provisions to assure the continued employment of all citizens of the United States who are employed by international air carriers or who are employed by domestic air carriers engaged in international air transportation and whose duties have related primarily to such transportation, and the reemployment of employees of the same categories who since August 27, 1940, have left their positions for the purpose of entering the military or naval forces of the United States, which provisions shall confer benefits at least as extensive as those provided in respect of the consolidation or merger of telegraph carriers by subsection (f) of section 222 of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended by the act of March 6, 1934, and which shall apply to all flight personnel of the character above described without regard to the restriction imposed by subdivision (11) of said subsection (f).

"(7) An agreement that the consolidated carrier will assume and perform the terms and conditions of any and all collective-bargaining agreements in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours, and working conditions which shall be in effect immediately preceding the approval of such consolidation or merger with respect to the employees specified in clause (6), and that the consolidated carrier will agree that any disputes or controversies that may arise as to seniority of the employees of the respective carriers and similar questions shall be arbitrated under the terms of the Railway Labor Act.

"(8) An agreement that if any individual or organization shall have been certified by the National Mediation Board, prior to the approval of such consolidation or merger as the representative of any craft or class of employees of an international air carrier, and if such certification shall still be in effect immediately preceding the approval of such consolidation or merger, that the consolidated carrier shall recognize and treat with such individual or organization as the representative of said employees until such time as the National Mediation Board shall certify another representative or find that no representative is entitled to be certified.

"(9) An agreement that the consolidated carrier will render air-transportation service between the United States and every country in the world having a population of more than 5,000,000 persons to which such service can be operated, except such countries as to which the Board, on the recommendation of the Policy Committee hereinafter designated, shall find that air-transportation service is not required by the public convenience and necessity or otherwise to further national policy.

"(10) An agreement that the consolidated carrier will file rates, fares, and charges for foreign air transportation which shall not be higher than reasonable maximum rates, fares, or charges, or lower than reasonable minimum rates, fares, or charges which may be determined from time to time by the Board.

"(11) An agreement that the consolidated carrier will enter into through-traffic arrangements with domestic carriers, in such form or forms as may be approved or prescribed by the Board, in order to assure the domestic carriers fair and equitable treatment with respect to the routing of through traffic between points outside the continental United States served by the consolidated carrier and points within the continental United States served by more than one domestic carrier, and also to enable the consolidated carrier to compete effectively with foreign companies which have a preferential position with domestic connections in their respective countries, by utilizing the selling offices and organizations of the domestic carriers or otherwise.

"(12) An agreement that the consolidated carrier will enter into agency agreements with citizens of the United States who are common carriers by water, in such form or forms as may be approved or prescribed by the Board, for the solicitation by such water carriers through their selling offices and organizations abroad of air traffic for the consolidated carrier.

"(13) An agreement that, in time of war, the United States, acting by such agency or agencies as the President may determine, may take over the possession or may direct the operation of the properties of the consolidated carrier during such emergency, under such terms and conditions as will afford just compensation to the consolidated carrier.

"(14) Provisions insuring that the consolidated carrier shall be at all times a citizen of the United States as defined in section 1 (13).

"(15) Provisions for placing the plan in effect and for defining its effective date.

"(c) After the hearing provided for in subsection (a), the Board shall within 60 days render a report and order in which it shall approve a plan, which may be different from the plan proposed, upon finding that such plan will in its opinion meet the requirements of subsection (b) of this section, is fair and equitable, and will be compatible with the public interest. The Board may thereafter, upon petition for good cause shown, filed within 30 days of the date of its order, and upon further hearings if the Board shall deem necessary, in a supplemental report and order modify any plan which it has so approved. The members of the initial board of directors of the consolidated carrier shall be fairly representative of its respective constituent elements and shall be subject to approval by the Board.

"(d) Upon the approval of a plan by the Board, any law or laws which would otherwise make unlawful any transaction provided for in any such plan shall not apply with respect thereto, and any carrier participating in or resulting from any transaction provided for in any such plan shall have full power to carry such transaction into effect without securing approval otherwise than as specified in this section: Provided, however, That nothing herein shall in anywise affect the application of the antitrust laws as defined in the act of October 15, 1914, chapter 323, section 1, to transactions other than those provided for in this title.

"(e) Any plan approved by the Board shall be carried out by the parties thereto within such reasonable period as the Board may determine. Nothing in this title shall in anywise affect the right of the United States by appropriate legislation to require modifications or changes with respect to the consolidated carrier or to require the consolidated carrier to divest itself of its property in whole or in part and in such event shall have no rights other than to fair compensation for its property.

"(f) If any plan approved by the Board is not carried out within the period fixed by the Board as provided in subsection (e), the Board may apply to a court as provided in section 1007 (b) of this act, to enforce compliance with any such plan. In any such proceeding the court, as a court of equity, may to such extent as it deems necessary for purposes of enforcing compliance with such plan, take exclusive jurisdiction and possession of the company or companies or the assets thereof which are subject to such plan, wherever located, and the court shall have jurisdiction in any such proceeding to appoint a trustee, and the court may constitute and appoint the Board as sole trustee to hold or administer under the direction of the court the assets so possessed. In any such proceeding the trustee shall dispose of such assets in accordance with the plan approved by the Board.

"(g) The provisions of title I, section 5, of the Securities Act of 1933, as amended, shall not apply to the issuance, sale, or exchange of any securities provided to be initially issued in any plan approved by the Board, which securities and transactions shall for the purposes of said Securities Act be treated as if they were specifically mentioned in sections 3 and 4 of said Securities Act.

"(h) The provisions of sections 1801 and 1802 of the Internal Revenue Code shall not apply to the issuance, transfer, or exchange of securities of the consolidated carrier or the making or delivery of conveyances in connection with the acquisitions by the consolidated carrier of the property, stock, or assets provided for in any plan approved by the Board.

"(i) (1) Section 112 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to recognition of gain or loss upon certain exchanges) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"'(11) Gain or loss not recognized on consolidation or merger of international air carriers: No gain or loss shall be recognized if property of a corporation is transferred in pursuance of a plan of consolidation or merger approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board under title XII of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 to another corporation organized or made use of to effectuate such a plan of consolidation or merger, in exchange solely for stock or securities in such other corporation.'

"(2) Section 112 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to recognition of gain or loss) is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"'(m) Exchanges by security holders in connection with consolidation or merger of international air carriers: No gain or loss shall be recognized upon an exchange consisting of the relinquishment or extinguishment of stock or securities in a corporation pursuant to a plan of consolidation or merger approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board under title XII of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938 in consideration of the acquisition solely of stock or securities in a corporation organized or made use of to effectuate such a plan of consolidation or merger.'

"(3) Section 113 (a) of the Internal Revenue Code relating to basis of property is amended by inserting after paragraph (22) the following:

"'(23) Property acquired pursuant to plan of consolidation or merger of air carriers: If the property was acquired by a corporation organized or made use of to effectuate a plan of consolidation or merger approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board under title XII of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, the basis in the hands of the acquiring corporation shall be the same as it would be in the hands of the corporation whose property was so acquired, increased in the amount of gain recognized to the corporation whose property was so acquired.'

"OWNERSHIP OF STOCK IN CONSOLIDATED CARRIER

"SEC. 1204. (a) It shall be unlawful for any person, partnership, association, or corporation to buy, acquire, hold, own, or control directly or indirectly, an amount of the common stock of the consolidated carrier which shall exceed 3 percent of the proposed initial common stock capitalization or the amount of common stock actually outstanding, whichever shall be higher. If any person, partnership, association, or corporation, by virtue of its stock ownership in an international air carrier or in a domestic air carrier engaged in international air transportation or otherwise, shall receive more than such 3 percent, such person, partnership, association, or corporation shall within 6 months after such receipt sell, distribute, or otherwise dispose of so much of the common stock of the consolidated carrier so received as shall exceed such 3 percent.

"(b) No person, partnership, association, or corporation entitled to acquire carrier shares of the consolidated carrier pursuant to subdivision (6) of subsection (b) of section 1203 shall acquire, directly or indirectly, any other voting stock of the consolidated carrier, except stock acquired by such person, partnership, association, or corporation as a result of the initial issue of stock of the consolidated carrier for property acquired by the consolidated carrier or stock distributed as a dividend on stock so initially issued or acquired pursuant to rights appertaining to stock which shall have been so initially issued or shall have been distributed as a dividend thereon.

"POLICY COMMITTEE

"SEC. 1205. There is hereby established a committee in the executive branch of the Government to be known as Policy Committee, International Civil Air Transportation (herein referred to as 'the Policy Committee'). The Policy Committee shall be composed of the Secretary of State, who shall act as its chairman; the Secretary of War; the Secretary of the Navy; the Secretary of Commerce; and the Chairman of the Civil Aeronautics Board. The Board shall consult with and obtain the approval of the Policy Committee before ordering the establishment of new routes or services or directing the suspension or abandonment of routes or services pursuant to section 1205 (d). The Policy Committee shall have regular meetings at least once in each 3 months and shall have special meetings at such times as the chairman shall direct. The chief executive officer of the consolidated carrier shall, unless otherwise directed, attend all meetings of the Policy Committee for the purpose of informing the Committee but without the right of vote.

"AIR TRANSPORTATION TO BE PROVIDED BY CONSOLIDATED CARRIER

"SEC. 1206. (a) The consolidated carrier shall have power to engage in international air transportation in all parts of the world. The consolidated carrier shall also have power to engage in air transportation between a point or points in the continental United States and a point or points outside the continental United States, and between one or more points in the United States outside its continental borders, to such extent and only to such extent that such air transportation shall have been authorized in a certificate of public convenience and necessity held at the effective date of the plan by an international air carrier the assets or capital stock of which are acquired by the consolidated carrier pursuant to the plan or thereafter issued to the consolidated carrier pursuant to section 401.

"(b) The consolidated carrier shall not hold or acquire, directly or indirectly, any interest in a domestic air carrier or consolidate with such a carrier or merge its properties, or any part thereof, with those of such a carrier.

"ROUTES AND SERVICES TO BE OPERATED BY CONSOLIDATED CARRIER

"SEC. 1207. (a) Except as provided in subsection (e), the consolidated carrier shall not operate any route or service unless such route or service shall have been specified in a statement of service plan filed with and permitted to become effective by the Board or shall have been required by the Board as hereinafter provided and shall not suspend or abandon any such route or service unless a statement as to such suspension or abandonment shall have been filed with and permitted to become effective by the Board or shall have been required by the Board as hereinafter provided. At least 30 days before the effective date of the plan, the consolidated carrier shall file with the Board and with the Postmaster General a statement of service plan setting forth the routes and services which the consolidated carrier proposes to operate during the year in which the consolidated carrier proposes to commence its operations. Such service plan may include services on any and all routes authorized by certificates of public convenience and necessity with respect to international air transportation held by any of the air carriers the capital stock or assets of which are being acquired pursuant to the plan, and on such other routes, if any, as may be deemed advisable in the public interest. Not later than the 1st day of December in each year, the consolidated carrier shall file with the Board and with the Postmaster General a statement of service plan setting forth the routes and services which the consolidated carrier proposes to operate in the ensuing year. The consolidated carrier may from time to time file with the Board and with the Postmaster General statements of proposed changes in any service plan theretofore filed.

"(b) Upon the filing of any statement pursuant to subsection (a) hereof, the Board shall give due notice thereof to the public by posting a notice of such statement in the office of the Secretary of the Board and by giving notice to such other persons as the Board may by regulation determine.

"(c) The initial statement of service plan required to be filed by the consolidated carrier and the statements required to be filed annually thereafter shall become effective within 30 days after the filing thereof and any other statement shall become effective within the time specified therein (which shall not be less than 10 days, unless the Board shall otherwise permit in a particular case), unless 5 days prior to the date when such statement would otherwise have become effective the Board shall give notice to the consolidated carrier postponing the effective date of any route or service proposed. If such notice shall have been given, the Board shall within not more than 20 days thereafter, either permit the statement to become effective or require it to be canceled or modified, as the Board shall determine to be in the public interest.

"(d) If the Board is of the opinion that routes or services in addition to those being operated by the consolidated carrier are required in the public interest or that any routes or services being operated should be suspended or abandoned, the Board shall give notice to the consolidated carrier to that effect. Unless within 20 days after the receipt of such notice the consolidated carrier shall file with the Board a statement of service plan complying with such notice and shall thereafter diligently proceed to initiate such service, the Board may require the consolidated carrier to take action in accordance with such notice. Any interested person may at any time request the Board to take action pursuant to this subsection.

"(e) The consolidated carrier may, without filing a statement of service plan pursuant to this section, operate extra sections, make charter trips or perform any other special service, subject, however, to the limitations provided in section 1206 (a) and to such regulations as the Board may prescribe.

"TRANSPORTATION OF MAIL

"SEC. 1208. The consolidated carrier shall provide necessary and adequate facilities and service for the transportation of mail on the routes operated by it, and shall transport mail whenever required by the Postmaster General, as provided in section 405 of this act. The consolidated carrier shall be paid reasonable compensation for such transportation. Such payment shall be at the same rates provided for payment by the United States for similar trasportation to foreign air carriers in any international treaty, convention, or agreement to which the United States is a party. If no such rate shall be applicable, the Board shall fix and determine the fair and reasonable rates of such compensation in the manner provided in section 406 of this act, except that the Board shall not take into account the third of the rate-making elements set forth in said section 406 (b).

"CONSTRUCTION-DIFFERENTIAL SUBSIDY

"SEC. 1209. (a) The Board is authorized and directed to grant to the consolidated carrier a construction-differential subsidy and other financial assistance for the construction by manufacturers in the United States of flight equipment to be operated by the consolidated carrier in international air transportation, as hereinafter provided.

"(b) The consolidated carrier may submit to the Board at any time plans for the acquisition of new flight equipment with respect to which it desires a construction-differential subsidy or other financial assistance under this section, giving such detail as to types, numbers, characteristics, cost, and the like as the Board may require. The Board, with the advice of the Policy Committee and any other interested agencies, shall promptly review such plans and, to the extent that it determines them to be adapted to effectuating the purposes of this title, shall certify them as qualifying for the financial assistance provided in this section upon the terms and conditions provided in this section and such further terms and conditions as it shall prescribe in the public interest. In such certificate the Board shall estimate the prospective economic life of such flight equipment.

"(c) In the case of any flight equipment which the Board has certified as provided in subsection (b), the Board will (i) as a construction-differential subsidy, pay to the manufacturer, or, if the consolidated carrier shall have made payment directly to the manufacturer, will reimburse the consolidated carrier for, the excess of the cost of the flight equipment (excluding the cost of any features incorporated therein for national defense purposes, which shall be paid by the Board in addition to the construction-differential subsidy) over the fair and reasonable estimate of cost, as determined by the Board, of the construction of such flight equipment under similar plans and specifications (excluding national defense features as above provided) in foreign aircraft plants deemed by the Board to furnish a fair and representative example for the determination of the estimated foreign cost of construction of flight equipment having the same general characteristics; and (ii) if the consolidated carrier shall so request, will advance not in excess of 75 percent of the net cost of the flight equipment to the consolidated carrier, any such advance to be secured by mortgage upon the flight equipment and to be repayable in a number of equal semiannual installments fixed by the Board over the prospective economic life of the flight equipment as certified by the Board and the unpaid balance to bear interest at the rate of 3½ percent per annum.

"(d) No flight equipment for which a construction-differential subsidy has been received pursuant to this section shall be sold, leased, or otherwise disposed of by the consolidated carrier during the economic life of such equipment as certified by the Board unless the consolidated carrier shall repay to the Board that proportion of the said subsidy (plus the cost of national-defense features) which the remaining economic life of such flight equipment bears to the economic life certified by the Board, or on such other terms and conditions as the Board may prescribe in the public interest. To the extent that any flight equipment for which a construction-differential subsidy has been received pursuant to this section is used by the consolidated carrier otherwise than in international air transportation, the consolidated carrier will pay to the Board annually that proportion of the construction-differential subsidy divided by the economic life of the flight equipment as certified by the Board which the gross revenues derived by the consolidated carrier from operations conducted by such flight equipment in other than international air transportation bears to the entire gross revenues earned by the consolidated carrier with such flight equipment during such year.

"(e) If the consolidated carrier proposes to acquire new flight equipment to replace flight equipment which is deemed by it to be obsolete or inadequate for successful operation, the Board is authorized in its discretion to buy such replaced flight equipment at a fair and reasonable valuation which shall not exceed the cost thereof to the consolidated carrier plus the actual cost previously expended thereon for reconditioning and less reasonable and proper depreciation, and shall apply such purchase price to that portion of the construction cost of new flight equipment which is to be borne by the consolidated carrier. The Board may scrap flight equipment so acquired or sell it after appraisement and due advertisement and upon competitive sealed bids.

"OPERATING-DIFFERENTIAL SUBSIDY

"SEC. 1210. (a) The consolidated carrier shall be entitled to receive from the Board an operating-differential subsidy as herein provided.

"(b) The Board, with the advice of the policy committee, shall from time to time determine which of the routes and services included within the service plan of the consolidated carrier are subject to competition by foreign-flag air carriers of such a character as to require the payment of an operating-differential subsidy in order to effectuate the purposes and policy of this title. The Board shall establish appropriate means for segregating the operations on account of which such an operating-differential subsidy is to be paid from other operations conducted by the consolidated carrier.

"(c) The amount of the operating-differential subsidy shall equal the excess of the fair and reasonable cost of wages and subsistence of flight and ground personnel, materials, insurance, and any other items of expense in which the Board shall find and determine that the consolidated carrier is at a substantial disadvantage in competition with one or more foreign-flag air carriers which constitute substantial competitors of the consolidated carrier on a particular route or service.

"(d) The basis for the payment of the operating-differential subsidy shall be initially established within 30 days after the initial service plan of the consolidated carrier shall have become effective. Such subsidy shall be payable on the basis of a final accounting made as soon as practicable after the end of each year or other period fixed by the Board. The Board may provide for the payment from time to time during any such period of such amounts on account as it deems proper. The basis of payment initially established shall be subject to review and readjustment from time to time but not more frequently than once a year at the instance of the Board or of the consolidated carrier. If any such readjustment cannot be reached by mutual agreement, the Board, on its own motion or on the application of the consolidated carrier, shall, after a proper hearing, determine the facts and make such readjustment in the amount of such future payments as it may determine to be fair and reasonable and in the public interest. The Board's decision shall be based upon and governed by the changes which may have occurred since the last preceding determination with respect to the items theretofore considered and other relevant facts and shall be promulgated in a formal order which shall be accompanied by a report in writing in which the Board shall state its findings of fact.

"(e) No operating-differential subsidy shall be paid for the operation of flight equipment which the Board shall determine to be obsolete unless the Board finds that the failure to replace such flight equipment has been occasioned by causes beyond the control of the consolidated carrier or that such payment is otherwise in the public interest.

"(f) If at the end of any 10-year period the net profit of the consolidated carrier (without regard to capital gains and capital losses) after deduction of appropriate depreciation and amortization charges has averaged more than 10 percent per annum upon the capital investment of the consolidated carrier used in or useful for the operations of the consolidated carrier, the consolidated carrier shall pay to the Board an amount equal to one-half of such profit in excess of 10 percent per annum: Provided, however, That the amount of profit so recaptured in respect of any period shall not in any case exceed the amount of the operating-differential subsidy payments made to the consolidated carrier for such period: And provided further, That if the effective date of the plan is prior to July 1 in any year the first computation under this subsection shall be for the period ending on the last day of December in the tenth year thereafter and if the effective date of the plan is on or after July 1 the first such computation shall be for the period ending on the last day of December in the eleventh year thereafter.

"(g) The consolidated carrier shall create and maintain a special reserve fund in such depository or depositories as the Board shall approve. If the profits of the consolidated carrier without regard to capital gains and capital losses in any year exceed 10 percent per annum upon the capital investment of the consolidated carrier used in or useful for its services, the consolidated carrier shall deposit annually such excess profits in this reserve fund. From the special reserve fund the consolidated carrier may make the following disbursements and no others:

"(1) Reimbursement to its general funds for the amount by which its net income for any year without regard to capital gains and capital losses shall be less than 10 percent per annum upon its capital investment used in or useful for its services.

"(2) Payment of amounts due from the consolidated carrier to the Board as provided in subsection (f) hereof, but such reimbursement shall be deferred until the amount on deposit in the special reserve fund shall be sufficiently in excess of 5 percent of the capital investment of the consolidated carrier used in or useful for its services so that payment of such reimbursement to the Board will not reduce the special reserve fund below a sum equal to such 5 percent.

"(3) If at the end of any year the amount in the special reserve fund shall exceed 10 percent of the capital investment of the consolidated carrier used in or useful for its services and if the amount in the special reserve fund shall also exceed the sum of 5 percent of the capital investment of the consolidated carrier used in or useful for its services and the amount that would be payable by the consolidated carrier to the Board pursuant to subsection (f) hereof if such payment were required to be made at such time, the consolidated carrier may withdraw part or all of such excess reserve and pay the sum so withdrawn into its general funds.

"The Board shall adopt and prescribe rules and regulations for the administration of the reserve funds contemplated by this subsection and shall include definitions of net income and the capital investment of the consolidated carrier used in and useful for the business: Provided, however, That in computing net income proper allowance shall be made for charges for depreciation and amortization and that in computing the capital investment used in or useful for the business there shall be included capital borrowed for terms exceeding 1 year and investments in and advances to associated companies as defined in section 1213 to such extent as the Board may determine that such investments or advances are in furtherance of the objectives of this title. The earnings of the consolidated carrier which are deposited in the special reserve fund as provided in this section, except earnings withdrawn from the special reserve fund, shall be exempt from all Federal taxes. Earnings withdrawn from such special reserve fund shall be taxable as if earned during the year of withdrawal from such fund.

"NATIONAL INTEREST AND OTHER SPECIAL SERVICES

"SEC. 1211. (a) If the Board, pursuant to section 1207 (d), shall require the consolidated carrier to establish routes or services (unless such route or service was agreed to be established as provided in sec. 1203 (b) (9)), or if the Board shall refuse to permit the suspension or abandonment of a route or service as requested by the consolidated carrier (unless such route or service was agreed to be maintained as provided in sec. 1203 (b) (9)), the consolidated carrier may advise the Board that, in its opinion, the route or service, the establishment of which has been required or the suspension or abandonment of which has been forbidden by the Board, will not, after taking into account amounts receivable by way of operating-differential subsidy as provided in section 1210, provide a reasonable return (computed on an additional cost basis upon the additional investment required for the operation of such routes or services), and shall furnish the Board with all pertinent facts. If the Board shall nevertheless require the said route or service to be operated, the Board shall establish the additional amount to be paid to the consolidated carrier as fair compensation for such operation and shall, to such extent as it deems appropriate, make grants to the consolidated carrier for capital investment in ground facilities outside the continental United States required for such operation: Provided, however, That in any case where such a grant is made appropriate steps shall be taken that the property obtained therewith shall be used generally for the benefit of the United States and that no such property shall be deemed a part of the capital investment of the consolidated carrier.

"(b) The Board may from time to time enter into contracts with the consolidated carrier for the operation of particular routes and services primarily noncommercial in character, for the construction, maintenance, or operation of airports, air navigation, communications and other ground facilities outside the continental United States and for such other purposes as the Board, with the approval of the Policy Committee, may deem to be in furtherance of the objectives of this title, upon such terms and conditions as the Board may determine.

"SUBSIDY TO MEET GOVERNMENTAL AID PAID TO FOREIGN COMPETITORS

"SEC. 1212. If in the case of any particular route or service the Board shall find that the governmental aid provided for in this title is in any respect inadequate to offset the effect of governmental aid paid to foreign-flag competitors, it may grant such additional aid as it determines to be necessary for that purpose: Provided, That no such additional aid shall be granted except upon an affirmative vote of four of the members of the Board.

"ASSOCIATED COMPANIES

"SEC. 1213. The consolidated carrier shall continue to hold all securities of aeronautical enterprises organized under the laws of foreign countries which it may acquire pursuant to the plan of consolidation, except as the disposition of such securities may be approved from time to time by the Board, with the advice of the Policy Committee. The consolidated carrier may from time to time, with the approval of the Board, to be granted with the advice of the Policy Committee, make additional investments in the securities of such aeronautical enterprises.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 1214. The Board shall include in its annual report to Congress a detailed statement of all transactions with the consolidated carrier under the provisions of sections 1209, 1210, 1211, and 1212.

"CONTRACT AUTHORIZATIONS

"SEC. 1215. In addition to amounts payable by way of construction-differential and operating-differential subsidies pursuant to sections 1209 and 1210, which shall be paid out of sums to be appropriated therefor, the Board is granted authorization to enter into contracts or to make grants as provided in sections 1211 and 1212, in an amount not to exceed $25,000,000, which shall also be paid out of sums to be appropriated therefor.

"EXEMPTION OF CONSOLIDATED CARRIER FROM CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF TITLE IV AND MODIFICATION OF CERTAIN OF SUCH PROVISIONS

"SEC. 1216. (a) The consolidated carrier is exempted from section 401 of this act except subdivisions (l) and (m) thereof, subject to the limitations provided in section 1206 (a), with respect to any routes or services specified in a statement of service plan filed with and permitted to become effective by the Board or required by the Board pursuant to section 1207 of this act; from section 408 of this act with respect to any transaction approved by the Board pursuant to section 1213 of this act; and from section 409 of this act insofar as concerns any interlocking relationship between the consolidated carrier and any carrier which shall have acquired carrier shares as provided in clause (6) of subsection (b) of section 1201 of this act or which shall have acquired stock of the consolidated carrier pursuant to the plan of consolidation.

"(b) All certificates of public convenience and necessity issued to international air carriers and all certificates of convenience and necessity issued to domestic air carriers insofar as the same authorize international air transportation shall be canceled upon the effective date of the plan of consolidation.

"(c) If the Postmaster General shall find at any time that the needs of the postal service require the transportation of mail by aircraft between the United States and foreign countries in addition to the transportation of mail being effected by the consolidated carrier at the time, the Postmaster General, in lieu of proceeding under section 401 (n) of this act, shall certify such finding to the Board which, if it concurs therein, shall thereupon take action pursuant to section 1207 (d) of this act.

"(d) From and after the enactment of this section and pending the effective date of the plan of consolidation, no certificate of public convenience and necessity to engage in international air transportation shall be issued except to an international air carrier, and from and after the effective date of the said plan no such certificates shall be issued.

"(e) Section 408 of this act is amended by adding the following at the end thereof:

"'ACQUISITION OF INTERESTS IN FOREIGN AERONAUTICAL ENTERPRISES

"'(f) It shall be unlawful for any domestic air carrier as defined in section 1201 (2) of this act or any person controlling such an air carrier or any other common carrier to purchase, lease, contract to operate the properties or any substantial part thereof, or acquire control in any manner whatsoever, of any foreign air carrier or any person engaged in any phase of aeronautics otherwise than as an air carrier in any foreign country.'

"Subsection (e) of section 408 is modified by striking out in the first sentence the words 'subsection (a)' and inserting in place thereof the words 'subsections (a) and (f).'

"(f) Agreements made on behalf of the consolidated carrier in the plan of consolidation as provided in section 1203 (b) shall have the same force and effect as orders made by the Board pursuant to title IV of this act and violation of any such agreement shall be subject to the sanctions and penalties prescribed in titles IX and X in respect of the violation of any such order."

The statement by Mr. McCARRAN is as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR PAT M'CARRAN

Mr. President, I am today reintroducing my bill to provide for the creation of the all-American-flag line as a single instrument to carry the flag of the United States, throughout the world, in the field of international air transportation.

In reintroducing this bill, I am not unmindful of recent developments which have indicated a substantial change in attitude by certain persons, and by certain interests, with regard to the principle involved in this bill.

More than 4 years ago, when I introduced my first all-American-flag-line bill, I made the statement that what I then proposed was the only workable solution to the problems which the United States then faced and would face in meeting the competition of the chosen instruments of other nations in the field of international air transportation. Further, I made the prediction that whether the United States adopted the single-company principle for its overseas commercial aviation as the result of congressional enactment, or in some other manner, this principle was certain to be adopted ultimately, because the hard realities of the situation would require it.

Every major event in the field of global air transportation, since I made that statement, has helped to prove the truth of it; and one does not now have to look very far ahead on the horizon to see that my prediction, also, is soon to come true.

Merger of Pan-American Airways and American Overseas Air Lines is a very long step toward a single company. In fact, I think this merger, if approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board, will make the accomplishment of a single company, either by further merger or by attrition, a virtual certainty within a relatively short period.

While I naturally welcome any developments which show the correctness of my views, I think it is important that the single company which seems about to come into being will not be precisely the same kind of single company that I have envisioned from the beginning, or which is provided for in the bill which I am about to reintroduce. My conception of a single company is an organization in which every transportation interest in America will have representation and monetary interest, in which the public at large will have a substantial interest, and which will be fully backed by all the resources and powers of the Federal Government, in realistic recognition of its importance as an instrument of national policy, national commerce, and even national diplomacy.

The word "monopoly" has many undesirable connotations. I have always been anxious that the single company which would ultimately carry the American flag in the airways of the world would be able to escape the application of that word in all its offensive connotations.

I have been consistent about this matter from the beginning. Though my bill has been rewritten several times, its objectives and basic principles have remained unchanged. When others have wavered in their position with regard to this proposal, tolerating it one day, supporting it the next, and disowning it a little later, I have never changed my course.

Our choice today—that is, our choice for the immediate future—is not between having a single instrument, and having several competing companies, but only between having a single instrument which is a creature of Congress, set up under law and joining all the transportation agencies of the country in a bond of common interest, or having a single company which is entirely the result of business maneuvers and established not as a matter of national policy and as an instrument of national policy, but as a matter of commercial expediency and an instrument of private gain.

That is our choice; and it is to provide an instrument and a forum for intelligently considering and wisely making that choice that I am reintroducing my all-American-flag-line bill.

BUILDING OF ACCESS ROADS IN FEDERAL FORESTS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution providing for an appropriation of $30,000,000 for the building of access roads in the Federal forests of the United States. I desire to comment briefly on the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, on this subject I wish to say that if we are to adopt a program of sustained yield, as the President recommended in his state of the Union message, if we are to make salable thousands of acres of presently federally owned timber, much of which is overripe, then we must afford access to the timber. If we wish to think about protecting the people's pocketbook, if we desire to adopt a program of sound economy in this Congress, this is one little item which will help to eliminate waste. At the present time there is great waste in the harvesting of the Nation's forests. Such waste takes the form in one particular of unavailability and inaccessibility of federally owned timber to those Government agencies which have control over it.

I recognize that there is some cause for believing that certain timber interests are opposed to an access road program, because, without the building of the roads—and they cannot be built unless the Congress of the United States appropriates the money—they find themselves in a preferred competitive position over small timber owners. I am advised by Government officials who have some jurisdiction over federally owned timber that it would be feasible for them, it certainly would be highly economical, to work out timber trade and timber contracts with small operators if the Government built access roads into Government timber so that such contracts could be consummated.

I have fought for this proposal heretofore. So far as economy is concerned, so far as need for a sound, sustained yield program is concerned, the evidence is all on my side. So far as opposition from large timber interests is concerned, interests which are seeking to prevent the passage of this type of legislation, I am perfectly willing always to meet them on the issue.

Therefore I am introducing this joint resolution again in this session of Congress. I respectfully urge an early hearing and an opportunity to present the economic data which, in my judgment, clearly support the measure.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 24) to provide for a suitable and adequate system of timber access roads to and in the forests of the United States, introduced by Mr. MORSE, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON THE OLYMPIC NATIONAL PARK

Mr. CAIN submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 5), which was referred to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs:

Whereas there is a need to conserve the scenic and the natural and historical objects and the wildlife within areas known as national parks, monuments, and reservations, and to provide for the enjoyment of the same in such manner and by such means as will leave them unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations, and a need for the preservation for public enjoyment of the Nation's greatest natural spectacles make it imperative that they be reserved for posterity; and

Whereas the inclusion of areas within national parks, monuments, and reservations is necessary to carry out the afore-mentioned objectives even though the inclusion of such lands within such areas may cause hardships on the communities, industries, and individuals dependent on such areas for their economic development; and

Whereas an unlimited extension of this otherwise sound policy leads to an improper balance between the preservation aims of the Park Service of the Department of the Interior and the needs for a sound program for the conservation of natural resources; and

Whereas our natural resources have been depleted by the demands of World War II and will for some years to come be overtaxed by the unfilled needs of our domestic economy, the requirements of national defense, and the European recovery program; and

Whereas there is a need for the highest degree of utilization of our natural resources under a sound conservation plan which will foster sustained production rather than nonproductive holding of our natural resources in order to satisfy the social and economic needs of our people, to strengthen the Nation against the ravages of discontent, to combat inflation, to fulfill our commitments for the European recovery program, and to prepare for any eventualities that may arise due to world unrest; and

Whereas the Congress by act of June 29, 1938 (52 Stat. 1241), creating the Olympic National Park, determined that in light of the domestic needs existing at that time that the Olympic National Park area could be extended to include a total area not exceeding 898,292 acres, but because of the demands caused by World War II and the needs of our domestic economy circumstances have so changed as to necessitate the review by the Congress of the acreage contained in the Olympic National Park; and

Whereas there are lands included within the Olympic National Park which are submarginal recreational areas and not suitable for park purposes; and

Whereas the national interest, as well as the communities of the Olympic Peninsula and particularly the Grays Harbor area and Port Angeles, require the sustained production and conservation through utilization and renewal of the forest resources of the Olympic Peninsula in order to provide an annual long-range supply of timber, such as will result from the operations of a sustained-yield program, for the production of products of the forest necessary for the national defense and the national housing program; and

Whereas a sound forest conservation program requires the transfer from the Park Service of the Department of the Interior to the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture of those areas which are not particularly suitable for recreational or park purposes but would be highly beneficial in the maintenance and furtherance of a sound sustained-yield program by the Forest Service of the Department of Agriculture under the provisions of the act of Congress of March 29, 1944 (58 Stat. 132); and

Whereas certain lands within the park can be transferred to the Forest Service without impairing the program established for the purpose of conserving the scenery and the natural and historical objects and the wildlife within said park: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on the Olympic National Park (hereinafter referred to as the "committee"), and to be composed of (a) four Members of the Senate, two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, to be appointed by the Vice President; and (b) four Members of the House of Representatives, two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Agriculture, and two of whom shall be members of the Committee on Public Lands, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall not affect the powers of the remaining members to execute the functions of the committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

SEC. 2. The committee, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, shall conduct a thorough study and investigation as to the lands included within the Olympic National Park, including but not limited to—

(a) the extent to which such lands are adaptable for park purposes;

(b) the extent, if any, to which such lands are not necessary to effectuate the program of the National Park Service;

(c) the extent, if any, to which such lands as found unnecessary for park service can be transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture for administration by the Forest Service for operation in connection with conservation through utilization programs proposed by the Forest Service for that particular area;

(d) the establishment of a permanent boundary line for the Olympic National Park and a need for the establishment of highways, trails, and other accommodations both within the area under the control of the Park Service and the area under the control of the Forest Service in order to provide the greatest utilization of the two areas for the enjoyment of the American people and for sound and economic forest management; and

(e) such other problems and subjects relating to the Federal control and management of park lands and forest lands within the Olympic Peninsula as the committee deems appropriate.

SEC. 3. The committee shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than December 30, 1949, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation and such other recommendations as it may deem advisable.

SEC. 4. The committee is authorized to call on the Director of the Park Service, Department of the Interior, and Chief, Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, to make available to the committee such technical services, information, and facilities as the committee shall require and may request the governments of the several States, representatives of business, industry, finance, and labor, and such other persons, agencies, organizations, and instrumentalities as it deems appropriate to attend its hearings, to give and present information, advice, and recommendations.

SEC. 5. The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eighty-first Congress; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer such oaths; to take such testimony; to have such printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services in reporting such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by them.

SEC. 6. The expenses of carrying out the provisions of this resolution, incurred by the Joint Committee on the Olympic National Park, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, not to exceed $25,000, including expenditures for the employment of experts, assistants, and other employees, and all expenses necessary for travel and subsistence incurred by members and employees while engaged in the activities of the committee thereof, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives on vouchers signed by the chairman or vice chairman of the committee. Disbursements shall be made by the Secretary of the Senate out of the contingent fund of the Senate, such contingent fund to be reimbursed from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives in the amount of one-half of the disbursements so made.

INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING ACTIVITIES

Mr. KILGORE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 23), which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Whereas there has developed much doubt and confusion concerning the application of the laws relating to the registration and reporting of lobbyists; and

Whereas there is widespread public belief that lobbying activities are being carried on by persons not making reports thereof as prescribed by law, in some instances because they do not believe the law applies to them and their activities; and

Whereas Members of the Congress and citizens petitioning their Congress in behalf of measures are not able to ascertain through the disclosures now being made under the law the affiliations of many of those persons who are lobbying; and

Whereas it is desirable in strengthening the democratic process to have complete identification of all individuals and organizations lobbying before the Congress, the nature, sources, and amounts of their support; and

Whereas there is every evidence of general public support for enactment of legislation to strengthen the Lobbying Registration Act of 1946: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate of the United States does hereby authorize the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, to make a full and complete investigation of all lobbying activities, and all efforts to influence, encourage, promote, or retard legislation, directly or indirectly.

The Committee on the Judiciary shall report to the Senate, as soon as practicable, the result of its investigation, together with such recommendations as it deems necessary to remedy any undesirable conditions that may exist under the present lobbying registration law.

For the purpose of this resolution, the Committee on the Judiciary, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions and recesses of the Eighty-first Congress, to employ such paid assistants as required, to require by subpena, or otherwise, the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony and to make such expenditures as it deems advisable. The cost of the stenographic service to report such hearings shall not exceed 25 cents per 100 words. There is hereby authorized from the contingent fund of the Congress the sum of _____ to defray the costs of the committee, to be paid upon vouchers approved by the chairman.

ADDRESS BY GOVERNOR DONNELLY, OF MISSOURI, BEFORE MISSOURI RIVER STATES COMMITTEE

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD immediately following my remarks a copy of a speech which was made at a recent meeting of the Missouri River States Committee by the Democratic Governor of Missouri, Hon. Phil M. Donnelly, who is the outgoing chairman of that very important committee. He is succeeded for the current year by the Republican Governor of Nebraska, the Honorable Val Peterson.

The Missouri River States Committee is a very important organization. It was provided for by the law passed in 1944 by Congress, and it is doing a very splendid job. I think the speech that was made on the occasion in question by the Honorable Phil M. Donnelly should be made a part of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I want to thank Governor Peterson for his invitation to address this group. I have enjoyed my work with the Missouri River States Committee and with the Missouri Basin Inter-Agency Committee. As you know, under the Missouri constitution a Governor may serve 4 years but cannot succeed himself. My term of office will expire on next January 10, so this is the last meeting I will attend.

For a few minutes I want to look back over the past 4 years in an attempt to recount some of the progress made by these committees and use this as a background for a picture of the future.

For your information, the Missouri River States Committee is composed of the Governors of the 10 Missouri River States, together with two additional representatives from each State. This group was organized to promote closer cooperative action among the States of the Missouri Valley and to represent the interests of those States. It has done all this and more. It has promoted a better understanding of the multiplicity of problems throughout the basin and made us all cognizant of the necessity for cooperation.

The Missouri Basin Inter-Agency Committee is composed of five governors selected by the Missouri River States Committee and five Federal representatives from the Departments of the Army, Agriculture, Interior, Commerce, and the Federal Power Commission.

This group was organized initially to coordinate the work of the various Federal agencies. It has done this and a great deal more. It has succeeded in establishing a close working relation between Federal agencies in the Missouri Basin; perhaps closer than anywhere else in the country. It has established close working relations between the various States and between State agencies and Federal agencies. It has solved some of the most intricate and difficult problems of State-Federal relationship. It has programed the Missouri River Basin development, not only for this year and next year but for the next 6 years, thus providing for orderly and efficient progress in the future. All these things have been done under existing principles of law without additional legislation. That is why I am proud to be a member of such a group.

Although construction of many important projects has been started in the Missouri Basin during the last 4 years, I would say that the greatest progress has been the increase in our breadth of vision.

In the fall of 1944 the President signed Public Law 534 and the Pick-Sloan plan became law.

With the Pick-Sloan plan as a nucleus we have been able to formulate a plan of development for the Missouri Basin which may truly be called comprehensive. The plan includes flood control, drainage, irrigation, hydroelectric power, soil conservation, improved land use, forestry, recreation, fish and wildlife, industrial expansion, public health, and many other conservation and developmental measures. Although much of this is in the planning stage considerable progress has been made in carrying out the initial phases of the plan. I believe that a large part of the credit for the comprehensive plan of development for the Missouri Basin and for the progress made during the past 4 years should go to the Missouri River States Committee and to the Missouri Basin Inter-Agency Committee.

The Missouri River Basin is a region of vast area and enormous resources. Let us look back into history for just a moment. The United States made the Louisiana Purchase in 1803. The population of the United States at that time was approximately 4,000,000 people, the same as in the State of Missouri according to the 1940 Federal census. The Louisiana Purchase comprised 827,987 square miles of territory, 529,000 of which are located within the Missouri River Basin. You can readily see how important that purchase was, is now, and always will be to our country. The total cost of the Louisiana Purchase was around $27,000,000. We have before us a developmental program which calls for an expenditure of something over 100 times the total of that cost to be spent in developing navigation and flood control, irrigation and reclamation, soil conservation, and land improvement in order that we may enjoy the resources of that purchase. We have the opportunity of enhancing its value to our future citizens where it may again become worth many times the original cost and what we may spend on it. The job we have undertaken will require many years to accomplish completely, and, in fact, the improvement of the valley and the use of its resources will never end, so long as man resides therein and uses it for producing his daily needs.

The development of those resources presents a multiplicity of problems. For instance, Nebraska is the only State of the 10 States that lies wholly within the basin that has no means of ingress or egress without crossing over the borders of some of the other States. Anyone in the other nine States can get out of the basin by crossing the divide within the borders of the particular State in which he may reside.

Nebraska is about centrally located in the basin and contains a good cross section of the resources and problems of the basin. In the upper part of the basin one of the major problems is a deficiency in rainfall. Floods are relatively unimportant. In the lower part of the basin the major problem is excessive rainfall at times. Our problem in the lower basin is to protect ourselves from this damaging excess of water and to control it in such a way as to make use of it rather than to allow it to destroy our economy. We in the lower basin do not as yet find it practicable to use this excess water for irrigation. There is the problem of soil erosion almost throughout the basin. There is a shortage of power in every part of the basin. All of these problems and many others exist right here in your own State of Nebraska. All of these problems and many more are in the process of being solved by the Missouri River development program. In the northern and western part of your State you have the problems common to the upper part of the basin. You need to irrigate thousands of acres of land to increase your agricultural production and stabilize your economy. You have hydroelectric power resources to be developed. In the southern and eastern part of your State you have the problems common to the lower part of the basin. You are chiefly concerned with the loss of your soil and with the tremendous losses caused by floodwater.

Over half of my own State of Missouri lies in the Missouri River Basin. In this area one of our primary concerns is the alarming rate at which we are losing our soil. This is a severe loss to us in several ways. The economy of this area is largely agricultural and always will be. About 68 percent of all raw materials for manufacturing in the area comes from the farm. We cannot continue to lose our valuable soil at the present rate and maintain the economy of this region, to say nothing of improving it.

Records show that for a certain county in northwest Missouri the average corn yield 50 years ago was 30 bushels per acre. The average corn yield for this same county at the present time is still 30 bushels per acre. Experts tell us that due to improved seeds and farming techniques in the last 50 years the average yield should be 60 bushels per acre. The reason it is not this high is because the soil has lost about half of its original productivity. In other words, scientific improvements in seed selection and plant breeding together with improvements in farming technique during the past 50 years have barely kept up with the loss in soil productivity.

In addition to the loss in fertility of our uplands due to erosion, we have further damaging effects from silt. It increases maintenance costs and shortens the effective life of drainage and flood-control structures. It is damaging to improvements on our alluvial land. It sometimes decreases the fertility of our alluvial land.

Another important problem in the Missouri portion of the basin is the destructiveness of excess flood water. This was forcibly brought to our attention during the spring of 1947 when the Missouri River and its major tributaries caused a flood damage of about $60,000,000 in the State of Missouri alone. At one time the flood problem at Kansas City was considered to be one of the most critical in the country. I am happy to say that works completed within the past 2 years and work now under way and soon to be started by the Corps of Engineers have this problem pretty well in hand. Work now under way on agricultural levees and other work in the advanced planning stages will protect thousands of acres of our agricultural land from the ravages of floodwater. The huge reservoirs now under construction on the main stem of the Missouri River in the Dakotas will also give us important relief in this respect.

In the beginning we in Missouri were not in complete agreement with the original Pick-Sloan plan, as authorized in the 1944 Flood Control Act. We felt that certain changes and adjustments in the plan were necessary and that it offered little as a solution to some of our most pressing problems. It was particularly devoid of any remedy for our soil erosion and land-use problems. It called for tremendous sacrifices of land for reservoirs on our tributary streams without adequate benefit to offset these sacrifices.

However, through our relationship with the Missouri Basin interagency committee we were able to get a reconsideration of the plan for our State. During the past 2 years we have been engaged in cooperative State-Federal studies and have found the solution to some of our most difficult problems. These studies are continuing and we are confident that a satisfactory plan will eventually be worked out. Our procedure is to study each tributary stream basin individually and attempt to arrive at the best plan of land and water resource development for that particular basin, while at the same time giving due consideration to the over-all Missouri Basin development. All State agencies having responsibilities and interests in land and water resource development are cooperating in these studies. Likewise such Federal agencies as the Corps of Engineers, Soil Conservation Service, Federal Power Commission, Fish and Wildlife Service, Public Health Service, Bureau of Agricultural Economics, and others are participating. Regardless of the problem that arises, I believe we have the best available technical skill to solve it, either at the State or Federal level, or both.

I want to stress the fact that the task of developing the Missouri River Basin can best be solved by cooperative effort on the part of the States located in the basin and the United States Government. If the people living within the basin do not put forth an honest effort to secure the best advantages for all, the United States Government can do little effectively and economically to secure the benefits desired. The 10 States concerned the most under this development do not have the resources by which they can do the things necessary in an effective way and in a way that will conserve the resources located within the basin.

I want to impress upon you that the States themselves cannot do the job in such manner as to conserve those resources. For example, in the State of Missouri, and I know it is true in the other States, we have been using the land for agricultural purposes in a most wasteful way. If we could have foreseen years ago what has been and is happening to our farm lands that wastes the soil and seriously reduces the productivity of that land, we would have taken steps to conserve it for future generations.

It is a difficult task for the people who are making their living from the soil to become financially able to do the things necessary to conserve the soil and retain its fertility. Likewise, those who are tilling the soil do not have the opportunity through their own efforts to gain the knowledge that is required for them to know how best to conserve the land for continuous use, so it necessarily becomes the problem of all of us through our governments to assist in the problem of determining how best to use our lands in order that we may live and that future generations may also have the same or similar uses of that land which we enjoy.

We sometimes hear objections to the granting by Congress of Federal funds for developing resources that are at times looked upon as being for local interests. Such objections should take into consideration all the benefits as well as the objectionable features.

The Missouri River States Committee and the Missouri Basin Inter-Agency Committee are concerned in the over-all problem of the basin. We have held our conferences and have worked on the principle that what is good for us collectively is good for us individually. We have demonstrated we can cooperate 100 percent in our efforts to bring about the development of the resources of the basin. The physical structures needed are being brought into existence and the problems of conserving our natural resources are being solved.

I would not leave you with the impression that all this progress has been easy or that there is not a big job ahead. There have been differences and conflicting interests. There will continue to be. This would be disheartening if it were not for the fact that we have in existence two well-organized bodies to solve these differences. I refer to the Missouri River States Committee and the Missouri Basin Inter-Agency Committee. These two groups always have been and I am confident always will be free from domination by any special interest. The public interest in the work of these two groups requires this must be so. Likewise these groups must remain free from domination by any State or Federal agency within their membership. Only in this way can they hope to continue to function properly in a democratic manner and for the public good.

One of the greatest dangers I can see for this great development program is that it could become overloaded with unsound accessories. In any large program of this kind there is always a temptation to throw in items here and there which may have nothing whatever to do with the main objectives of the program or which may be economically unsound. Too much of this can hurt the program as a whole and possibly destroy it altogether. I urge the members of the committees to analyze thoroughly proposed measures before placing them into the program.

I cannot urge too strongly active participation by the States in this development program. The people of the basin will never receive the full benefit from the program without the help of the States involved. I believe the States of the basin recognize this and will continue to fulfill their obligations in that respect. We see enormous dams and other engineering structures under construction. We are inclined to point to these structures with pride as evidence of the progress we are making. We are wholly justified in doing this.

But we must also recognize these structures for what they are—a means of improving the economic and social status of the Missouri Basin and of the entire Nation. These structures will help us to increase the supply of food and fiber for the Nation; they will light the homes of the Missouri Valley; they will help to do the work of the overburdened farmer; they will save the homes and property of the valley from destructive floods; they will provide an incentive for new industries to spring up.

But to do all this they must first be properly planned, then properly constructed, and finally, properly used so that their full potentialities are made available for public benefit. State governments can and should be of great assistance in helping to see that all this is done.

By widespread use of soil conservation and improved land-use measures, we can greatly increase the agricultural production of the basin. We can at the same time reduce the damage from silt. Above all, we can conserve one of our most fundamental natural resources for those who come after us.

To do this job properly, we need the cooperation of every citizen in the basin. There is a tremendous educational task involved. Here again the States can and should render valuable assistance. This by no means exhausts the list of responsibilities which the States have in connection with the Missouri River Basin development program.

Before the job will have been completed, many of us now carrying on the work will cease to be actively connected with it and others will take over. Because of that, it requires continuous effort to transmit what we have learned to those who follow and to encourage all concerned to cooperate in order that we may receive the greatest development possible for the money that is to be spent in carrying out the work.

I should not fail to say that the work we can do in controlling the Missouri River to reduce the destructive effects of the floods within its basin, will also aid in protecting farmers and cities in the lowlands below the mouth of the river in the States that border the Mississippi extending to the Gulf of Mexico. So it is difficult to measure all the benefits that may come to the Nation from what we are engaged in doing.

I might say it would be very difficult to find an organization, made up of the two committees in the field actively carrying on this work, that would perform their task with as little dissension and with more honest effort than is being put forth by those connected with the Missouri River Basin development as being carried out under the Pick-Sloan plan.

In my work as a member of the Inter-Agency Committee I have traveled throughout the Missouri Basin. I have never failed to find enthusiastic support for the Missouri Basin development program. That has made possible the progress to date. Such support will assure continued progress. Such support indicates to me that the people of the valley are fully aware of the significance of this development and are willing to assume their share of the responsibility.

In concluding I want to say that I have thoroughly enjoyed working with my fellow governors and with the Federal representatives on these two committees. I am proud of any contribution I may have made to the Missouri Basin development program. Good progress has been made but we are only started. Much remains to be done. With continued cooperation between the people, the States, and the Federal Government, the program should not fail.

RELIGIOUS PERSECUTION—BARRING OF RETURN TO GERMANY OF CERTAIN NUNS

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD a statement prepared by me dealing with a serious situation which should be the subject of inquiry by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR HERBERT R. O'CONOR

Shocking revelations have come to us which indicate that we have not yet attained the objectives for which our people fought in the recent World War. That terrible conflict with its cost of lives and resources was waged primarily to save men everywhere from the degradation of slavery—slavery of the mind as well as of the body.

Today, unfortunately, in the midst of our continuing struggle for peace, there are disquieting evidences of such control of men's minds throughout the world which demand our vigorous protests if the world is not to lose completely the benefits of that recent costly struggle.

Yesterday news dispatches from Munich reported the barring, evidently by Communist officials, of a group of German nuns who had been teaching in Rumania from returning to their German homes. I believe that this action is of such grave concern as to warrant the investigation and study of the Foreign Relations Committee of this distinguished body.

America has furthered the doctrine of tolerance and of freedom of thought. Our country has been the leading exponent of this doctrine with regard both to our own citizens and to visitors from other lands. Continuingly, however, as in this case, we find concrete evidence that Moscow and the countries within the Russian orbit are not granting to their own subjects, or to others under their domination, that freedom of thought and mind which is so necessary to world understanding.

Again and again we have been given assurance from the Kremlin that freedom of thought and of conscience is permitted throughout Russia and throughout its allied countries. Again and again, however, their actions have belied their words.

The extraordinary vigor of the protest lodged with the Hungarian Government very recently by our Acting Secretary of State in connection with the arrest of Cardinal Mindszenty, Catholic primate of that country, brings into focus the very disturbing policies of the countries behind the iron curtain with respect to all those freedoms which we in America hold dear, and which must be fostered throughout the world if ever a true peace is to be had.

In this particular instance of the application of Communist policy a group of 40 nuns, who had been teaching for several decades in Rumania, were returning to their home in Germany, following efforts in their behalf by the American military government religious affairs officer and the Catholic archbishop of Munich. On their arrival at Salzburg they were warned by officials of an unidentified country not to return to Germany. If they did, they were told, none of their compatriots still remaining in Rumania would be permitted to leave.

Mr. James Eagan, United States military government religious affairs officer in Bavaria, did not identify the offending country. Nevertheless it is well known that both Russia and Rumania maintain liaison officers in Salzburg, and the inference is unmistakable.

Because America is responsible for a portion of Germany under occupation agreements, this recent action might be interpreted as the fault of our representatives in the American zone. We should disavow any such refusal to permit these nuns or any other religious groups from returning to their homeland. We should question further and protest vigorously against the action of any other nation in refusing freedom of conscience and of worship. Most important of all, we should protest to the world against the action of a tyrannical government which has embarked upon a course of oppression and persecution in order to accomplish an impossible task, namely, of wiping out religious beliefs from the hearts and souls of human beings.

I respectfully suggest that the Senate Foreign Relations Committee investigate this serious situation and report upon its findings for the information of the United States Senate and of the entire Nation.

THE BUDGET

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States, which the Chief Clerk proceeded to read.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, this is a very lengthy message. I think the letter of transmittal comprises approximately 80 pages. I suggest that the further reading be dispensed with, and that the entire message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the message, with the accompanying budget, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

(For letter of transmittal, see pp. 134–153 of House proceedings of today.)

LABOR LAW STRIKE-DELAYING MACHINERY

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, there appears in the Washington Post of this morning an article which reads in part as follows:

Cyrus S. Ching found fault yesterday with the elaborate strike-stalling machinery of the Taft-Hartley Act in national emergencies. He said important features of it delay agreements.

The Director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service also said in a report to Congress that Government mediators must remain impartial to be effective in settling labor disputes.

But Ching refrained from stating any stand in the current controversy over whether his agency should remain independent or, as asked by Secretary of Labor Maurice Tobin, return to the Labor Department as it was prior to the Taft-Hartley Act.

READY TO RECOMMEND

However, Ching strongly insisted that Government mediators are at maximum usefulness only as long as they remain neutral as between labor and management. He said he was ready to make legislative recommendations when requested.

As a member of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, I certainly shall call upon Mr. Ching to make recommendations at the earliest possible date, as soon as we can have a meeting of that committee. I say that because I know of no one in all America—and I make this statement in the utmost sincerity—whose views as to impartial processes in the field of labor relations I would rather have than those of the present Director of the Mediation and Conciliation Service. I served with him for 2 years on the War Labor Board when he sat there as a representative of industry. Although he was a very able representative of industry in seeing to it that the legitimate rights of industry were at all times considered by the Board, he was more than a representative of industry. In my judgment he fully filled the quasi-judicial position which was his during the war as a member of that Board. So, I am satisfied that when he makes recommendations to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, we shall have the recommendations, first, of a public servant who understands how to be impartial on great controversial issues.

The article continues to quote Mr. Ching, as follows:

It is essential to the effective performance of the mediator's duty, Ching advised Congress, that his institutional and personal relationships be such that neither side will have its suspicions aroused, however unjustly, that he is answerable to another with a suspected partisan stake in the dispute.

I digress further, Mr. President, to say that I am completely in agreement with that observation by Cyrus Ching; and therefore I shall assume, until he recommends to the contrary, if he should, that it would be rather difficult to make a case for a return of the Conciliation Service to the Department of Labor. I happen to hold to the view that the Conciliation Service should be neither a part of the Department of Labor nor a part of the Department of Commerce; and it is just as sensible to make it a part of the Department of Commerce as it is to make it a part of the Department of Labor, inasmuch as the Conciliation Service is now an independent agency. It is true that housekeeping work is done for it in the Department of Labor; but certainly where we need to keep it is in a position of unquestioned impartiality, beyond suspicion either on the part of the general public or on the part of industry, in this case. Returning the Conciliation Service to the Department of Labor would, in my judgment, once more subject it to the charge of being biased. Such a charge would greatly weaken the effectiveness of the Service, even if bias did not, in fact, exist. I think great progress has been made in the effort to have the employers give full recognition to the service the Mediation and Conciliation Service can perform for them in bringing them together with the leaders of labor around a free collective-bargaining table.

Although Mr. Ching in his report does not make a definite commitment in regard to where the Service should be located, I take it for granted that his advice that the conciliators should always be answerable to both parties to a dispute, and that neither side should be in a position of even suspecting the impartiality of a conciliator, leaves no room for doubt as to where he will finally have to take his position in answer to specific questions which I intend to ask him when he comes before our committee.

The article continues:

The Mediation Service's report on its experience under several Taft-Hartley provisions included these observations:

1. The 80-day court injunctions in national emergency disputes have tended to delay rather than facilitate settlement, because both sides tend to sit out the period, leaving a question whether there should be a shorter injunction period or one of indefinite duration.

Mr. President, I particularly recommend this finding by the head of the Conciliation Service to the Members of the Senate on my side of the aisle, most of whom voted for the Taft-Hartley bill. I make this recommendation because, prior to the passage of the bill, I urged a consideration of the very observation which Mr. Ching now makes after more than a year's experience with the law.

I read further from the article:

2. The requirement that a Presidential fact-finding board must report its findings before an injunction can be obtained interferes with collective bargaining in the crucial period before a strike deadline.

I think Mr. Ching is quite correct. Once again I point out that those of us who opposed the passage of the Taft-Hartley bill in the form in which it was finally passed urged further consideration of this particular section of the bill. In fact, Mr. President, in a speech which I delivered on November 12, 1948, at the University of Pennsylvania, before a labor institute conducted by the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, the speech being entitled "The Emergency Dispute Provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law," I discussed at some length this particular point which Mr. Ching raises in his annual report. Therefore, at this point in the RECORD, as part of the body of my remarks, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have my speech of November 12, on the emergency dispute provisions of the Taft-Hartley law, printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE EMERGENCY DISPUTE PROVISIONS OF THE TAFT-HARTLEY LAW

(Address by WAYNE MORSE, United States Senator from Oregon, before the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, November 12, 1948)

Chairman Balderston, President Stassen, ladies and gentlemen, you couldn't have paid me a finer compliment than to have me introduced by Harold Stassen. In his introduction of me he referred to the fact that at one time I was one of his teachers at the University of Minnesota. However, as a teacher I tried to put into practice the teaching rule that to be a good teacher one must be willing and able to learn from his students.

Let me tell you that Harold Stassen was one of those students who taught me much during my years at the University of Minnesota. He has taught me a great deal ever since in the school of American politics, and I am looking to him to keep right on teaching all of us in the Republican Party a great many lessons that need to be learned by the party.

I want to congratulate the University of Pennsylvania and the State of Pennsylvania in selecting such an American statesman to the presidency of the University of Pennsylvania. I am positive that Harold Stassen will prove to be a great educational statesman, as the head of this university. He would think it flattery, and I mean no flattery, if I proceeded to tell you of the high esteem in which I hold this fine American. Nevertheless, I want him to know that I expect to continue to sit at his feet, both in the field of education and of politics. I think there is a great future ahead for him because America needs the type of statesmanship Harold Stassen is giving to our country.

You all make me feel very homesick here, tonight, because as Harold has mentioned, for some 21 years it was my privilege and my opportunity to live in an academic environment where the motivation is, and should be, a search for the truth. I don't always live in that environment these days. Sometimes partisan politics and political strategy rather than a search for the truth and action based upon objective data come to prevail in the Congress of the United States. I offer the recent record of the Eightieth Congress as exhibit A in support of that observation. However, if my political fortunes should ever turn into misfortunes, I am sure I shall always be very happy to return to the cloistered walls of a great university again, working with teachers and students who recognize that after all the search for truth and putting the truth into practice represent the only hope for the democratic form of government.

In my comments here tonight I shall read a short paper on the Taft-Hartley law and national emergency disputes. Then, if time permits, I shall ad lib. a bit regarding my personal observations as to the problems which I think are ahead of us in regard to labor legislation.

It is with considerable diffidence that I approach a discussion of our experiences under those provisions of the Taft-Hartley law dealing with public emergency disputes.

In the months that have elapsed since the act became law in June 1947—and even before that time—I have spoken frequently and on occasion at considerable length in opposition to the Taft-Hartley law. Most of my comments have been concerned with needed amendments to the Wagner Act as a substitute program for the Taft-Hartley Act. My impressions of the operation of the Taft-Hartley law as it touches emergency disputes have been obtained primarily from the sidelines. I have no doubt that other speakers at this conference—such as Sumner Slichter and Harry Shulman, who spoke this afternoon, or Dean Balderston or George Taylor, can give you a much more intimate and informative discussion of the emergency disputes section of the law. They have had first-hand experience as members of boards of inquiry appointed by the President pursuant to the Taft-Hartley Act to report on specific national emergency disputes.

There can be no doubt that my good friend, Cy Ching, from his vantage point as director of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, is better qualified to give you a well-rounded picture of the national emergency sections of the Taft-Hartley Act than I. Perhaps, speaking jocularly, I should suggest that the reason those who have served on boards of inquiry have not been prevailed upon to appraise the operations of the emergency disputes provisions of the act and to make suggestions to this conference is that their discussion might be construed as recommendations. Thus, they, mindful of the terms of the law which provide that reports of boards of inquiry shall not contain any recommendations, might feel constrained to refrain from expressing opinions or recommendations at this conference.

It is somewhat difficult to understand why those who have served as members of boards to inquire into the issues of labor disputes, and who have had the responsibility of ascertaining the facts regarding the causes and circumstances of a given dispute, should then be specifically enjoined from making recommendations for settlement of the dispute. I shall touch on the soundness of this provision of the law later in my discussion, but I do want to observe at this point that a flat prohibition against recommendations by boards of inquiry seems to me to be of questionable validity, assuming that the fact-finding technique serves a useful purpose.

Probably it is unnecessary to sketch for this audience, even briefly, the steps provided in the Taft-Hartley Act for coping with national emergency disputes. However, it may be well to recall the over-all scope and procedure of the act in this regard, before commenting on specific provisions.

Whenever, in his opinion, a threatened or actual strike or lockout involving all or a substantial part of an industry, not subject to the Railway Labor Act, will imperil national health or safety, the President is authorized to appoint a board of inquiry consisting of a chairman and such other members as the President shall determine. The board is authorized to hold public or private hearings and is vested with the power of compulsory process. After inquiring into the issues and ascertaining the facts of the dispute, the board is required to make a written report to the President which, however, shall not contain any recommendations. The President then makes the report available to the public and the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

In the words of the statute, the President, "upon receiving a report from a Board of Inquiry"—but apparently not before—may instruct the Attorney General to seek an injunction. If the court finds that the dispute affects all or a substantial part of the industry and will imperil national health or safety, it may enjoin the strike or lock-out and make any other orders it deems appropriate. The Norris-LaGuardia Act is not applicable in these cases. After an injunction has issued, it is the duty of the parties to make every effort to adjust and settle their differences, aided by the Mediation and Conciliation Service. The law says, however, that the parties are under no duty to accept any proposals made by the Service.

After an injunction has issued, the President is required to reconvene the Board of Inquiry. If the dispute is not settled at the end of a 60-day period dating from the issuance of the injunction, the Board reports to the President the current position of the parties and the efforts made toward settlement, including the employer's last offer of settlement. Within the next 15 days, the NLRB must take a secret vote of the employees as to whether they wish to accept the employer's last offer. Five days later the Board must certify the results of the vote to the Attorney General, who then must ask the court to discharge the injunction. The motion has to be granted.

The final step is the requirement that the President make a full report to Congress, together with such recommendations as he sees fit.

Boiled down even further, it is, I think, fair to say that the emergency dispute sections of the Taft-Hartley Act enforce an 80-day "cooling-off" period, during which a Presidential board reports the facts without recommendations, and employees vote on the question whether to accept or reject, in toto, the last offer of their employer. If the dispute is not settled during this period, the President lays the problem before Congress.

One of the difficulties I see in the emergency dispute procedure is that the timetable established by the law may have the effect of interfering with direct negotiations and hampering the effective use of mediation at a time when continued negotiation and mediation would be especially helpful. This is occasioned by the provision which seems to require that before an injunction can be sought, the Board of Inquiry must have made its first report. While it may not be absolutely necessary that the Board report precede the petition for an injunction, apparently that chronological order of events was intended, because section 208 says that the President may direct the filing of an injunction petition "upon receiving a report" from the Board. In any event, the practice has been to follow this order, and it is fairly clear that the Board's findings materially aid the Government in persuading the court that an injunction should be granted.

The necessity for attending hearings of the Board and acquainting its members with the facts of the dispute, during the last week or two before the zero hour, not only takes valuable time which the parties might spend to better advantage in further negotiations and mediation, but also tends to an early crystallization of position. It is, of course, understandable that all preliminary steps should be completed in advance of the date any injunction needs to be obtained if a stoppage which seems likely to occur is to be delayed or averted. Assuming for the moment that the injunctive remedy is desirable, production is less likely to be interrupted if it is invoked before, rather than after, a work stoppage has taken place. Since the Board's report is regarded as an essential preliminary step to an injunction, it is of course desirable, once the President has concluded that an emergency situation is likely to arise, to convene the Board of Inquiry early enough so that it will have time to report the facts before the time arrives for petitioning for the injunction.

I believe that serious consideration should be given to revising the law so as to permit of greater flexibility in deciding whether the report of the Board of Inquiry should precede or follow application for an injunction. An alternative might be to provide that the President may direct the Attorney General to petition for court relief either upon receiving the Board of Inquiry's report or upon certification by the Director of the Mediation and Conciliation Service that the dispute threatens to imperil national health or safety. The Mediation Service is no stranger to the facts of an impending dispute, since it closely follows the progress of negotiations and frequently furnishes mediation and conciliation services. Hence its judgment as to the seriousness of the dispute and the likelihood of a stoppage is entitled to a great weight and, I suggest, could furnish the basis for action. As a matter of fact, the decision to appoint a Board of Inquiry in the first place is made, in large part, upon the basis of the appraisal by the Mediation Service. I see no compelling reason why the report of the Service could not, in many cases, be substituted for the first report of the Board of Inquiry as the preliminary step in the injunction proceedings.

A more debatable provision in the law, in my judgment, is the prohibition against recommendations by boards of inquiry. This provision stems from the Senate committee bill, which in turn was derived from proposals by Senator IVES. The theory behind it probably represents a reaction to the experiences of the war period. As explained in the report of the majority of the Senate committee, a procedure which amounted to compulsory arbitration was utilized through the instrumentality of the War Labor Board, and this system tended to emphasize unduly the role of the Government with the result that employers and unions tended to avoid solving their difficulties by free collective bargaining. Recommendations of fact-finding boards or over-all mediation tribunals, the report found, tend to set patterns of wage settlements for the entire country which are frequently inappropriate to the peculiar circumstances of certain industries and certain classes of employment. Hence the fact finders were prohibited by law from making recommendations—at least in public. The minority members of the Senate committee, on the other hand, said that the prohibition against recommendations was "unwise" and that there are many occasions upon which it is desirable for boards of inquiry to make recommendations.

While it is a mistake to draw too heavily upon experience under the Railway Labor Act, so frequently cited as a model of labor legislation, nevertheless, I have heard no serious suggestions that it should be amended so as to strip emergency boards of the power to make recommendations for settlement. Granted that there are historical differences between the labor problems of the railroad industry and other basic industries, and in the methods evolved for their settlement, I am not convinced that they are so great that we must avoid recommendations by governmental boards in one case and foster them in the other.

Undoubtedly the effect of recommendations by a governmental board is to bring public pressure to bear upon the parties to settle their dispute by accepting the recommendations of the fact-finding body. To that extent, there is an element of compulsion. However, it seems to me that this process cannot rightly be termed compulsory arbitration. If it can be so labeled, then we should also avoid fact-finding without recommendation, for the basic theory of both devices is the same: that the public, once apprised of the facts, will make its opinion known with such force that the parties will reach a settlement. In either case, I submit, our hopes are pinned to an effective mobilization of public opinion for an equitable settlement in the light of the facts. The question really is whether that opinion shall be enlightened and effective or confused and diverse. If boards of inquiry, composed of men well known and respected for their impartiality, were allowed, but not required, to make recommendations, the settlement of national emergency disputes might be aided rather than handicapped.

There is some evidence that the 80-day injunction is not altogether unwelcome in emergency disputes. While labor leaders uniformly protest in public against the injunction, it is probably no secret that in some of the recent cases they have privately attempted to pressure the Mediation Service and the executive offices to have a Board of Inquiry appointed and to secure an injunction prior to the strike deadline. Doubtless a partial explanation of this circumstance is that unions are understandably reluctant to have to bear the onus of a strike in a vital industry and hope that during the "cooling off" period a peaceful solution will be found. On the other hand, we have the Board of Inquiry in the maritime dispute, under the chairmanship of Harry Shulman, reporting that "some of the unions persist in the view that the injunction and the 'cooling off' period * * * impede, rather than encourage, settlement," because with respect to parties willing to cooperate the effect is to postpone settlement, while in the case of parties unwilling or unable to get along "resistance is stiffened and resentment heated."

There is danger, of course, that the existence of governmental machinery for arriving at suggested or recommended solutions to labor disputes will encourage one or the other of the disputants to bring about Government intervention in the hope that his cause will be supported by the recommendations of the official body. Certainly we must recognize that such an attitude was a significant factor in many disputes that appeared on the docket of the War Labor Board and that it was encouraged by the ready availability of the governmental decision-making agency. The result was to short circuit and discourage voluntary collective bargaining. We must be on our guard to avoid a repetition of that experience.

However, if we accept this premise that boards of inquiry in national emergency cases serve a useful purpose by finding and reporting the facts, and assume that discretion will be exercised in how frequently and in what disputes they are used, I am inclined to believe that it would be desirable to give them power to make recommendations. Especially would public recommendations be helpful if the parties were to agree, in advance, that recommendations should be made and that they would be adhered to on all or certain designated issues. The process would then take on the attributes of voluntary arbitration.

The requirement that the NLRB poll the employees on the last offer of the employer is, in my judgment, unnecessary and unsound. It perpetuates a device which experience with a similar provision of the War Labor Disputes Act demonstrated to be wholly ineffectual in reducing strikes. You will recall that Congress eventually came to the conclusion that these strike votes were of no value, and attached a rider to the appropriation of the NLRB prohibiting it from conducting any further such votes.

There are at least two fallacies in the last-offer vote provision. First, it erroneously assumes that the latest offer at the time the vote must be taken is in fact the employer's final offer. However, we all know that parties frequently are still in negotiation and may modify their positions considerably even before the poll can be conducted.

Second, the vote becomes a vote of confidence in the union's bargaining representatives, rather than an expression of satisfaction with the terms of the employer's proposal.

In most labor disputes, if you put up to the union members an issue of whether or not they are going to vote to sustain the union officers or overrule the union officers, you know what the result usually is—they vote to sustain. Thousands and thousands of dollars of public monies, in my judgment, have been wasted on these so-called last-offer votes, when what they are voting on is whether they want to go along with the union officers. I will make the guess that in 90 percent of the cases the union members have rejected the employer's last offer and thereby voted to sustain their union officials. This section has not produced the results hoped for by the proponents of the Taft-Hartley Act. Some of us had the temerity during the debates on the Taft-Hartley bill to predict that this provision entailed an empty gesture and showed a very unrealistic approach to labor disputes by the proponents of the Taft-Hartley bill.

In the history of the current west coast maritime dispute, we have a striking illustration of the fact that employees may be voting on a supposed offer of an employer which is nonexistent or which has been substantially modified prior to the vote. In this maritime case after the Labor Board had gone to the expense and trouble of sending ballots to seamen in far-off ports, the employers withdrew all offers. More recently, it appears that a new formula may have been found for settling this strike. But in any event, this one case should suffice to demonstrate the ineffectiveness of the last-offer vote. In any revisions of the Taft-Hartley Act in the coming session of Congress, I believe it would be advisable to eliminate this provision.

Mentioning the current maritime dispute on the west coast, I want to take at least a minute once again to express my opinion about that strike. It is an opinion I have been expressing for many weeks on many platforms of America. I want to express it here again tonight even though it is an opinion which has caused me to receive some kicks from the leaders of the union and has not brought me any bouquets from the shipowners. Nevertheless, I am going to express the opinion that there is no justification for a continuance of that stoppage of work. Further there never was any justification for its starting in the first place, either on the part of the shipowners or on the part of the maritime unions. Here is an industry with one of the finest arbitration set-ups in any collective-bargaining agreement in the country, and it should have been used without any strike. I have said to the shipowners and to Mr. Bridges and his union in public statements, and I repeat it here tonight, "You are performing a great disservice to the economy of this country in continuing the dispute when you have in your own labor contract peaceful procedures of arbitration through which to settle your differences."

I say to them from this platform tonight that the irrelevant issues which both sides are raising in this dispute have nothing to do with the wages, hours, or conditions of employment about which the dispute is supposed to have arisen. The strike is costing us over $4,000,000 a day, and it should be stopped at once by returning to arbitration.

I want to commend two great men in the field of labor relations tonight, in connection with the west coast maritime strike—one representing the employer point of view, outside of the shipping industry, and the other representing labor's point of view, outside of the maritime unions. I refer, of course, to Almon Roth, of the San Francisco Employers' Council, and to Philip Murray, of the CIO. Both of these men, if I read the press aright, and if they are accurately quoted, and I think they are, recognize the fact that irrelevant issues have been raised by the parties to this dispute and that at the present time the fight is being fought not on issues that involve good-faith collective bargaining but rather over attempts to destroy the personal leadership of the men representing both the shipowners and the unions. I take the position that it is improper for the shipowners to try to break a union's leadership, irrespective of what they may think of that leadership, and I say, likewise, that it is equally improper for a union leadership to bring into a dispute involving wages, hours of work, and conditions of employment, political factors that have no connection with those issues. I hope I make myself clear.

Congress can perform a real service to the country if, in the consideration of proposals to amend or repeal the Taft-Hartley Act, it also gives careful attention to existing procedures for handling national emergency cases. Unfortunately, the tendency has been to act on little or poorly digested evidence, or to ignore the recommendations of those who are equipped to offer constructive suggestions. The objective is and should be the development and strengthening of voluntary procedures and free collective bargaining, rather than enlarging the role of Government as the decision maker.

The conclusions drawn early in 1947 by the labor committee of the Twentieth Century Fund, headed by William H. Davis, bear repeating in this connection. That committee concluded:

1. That there should be no Federal legislation prohibiting strikes or lock-outs, and that dispute settlement "should continue to be by industrial self-government through genuine collective bargaining with full freedom of contract";

2. That in industries essential to health or safety a stoppage is intolerable, and, in recognition of that fact, responsible management and labor should by agreement provide an adequate substitute for strikes and lock-outs;

3. Arrangements are needed to discourage the declaration of emergencies, which could be done by legislation authorizing the President to appoint emergency boards only on condition that the parties agree to try out board recommendations for a limited period;

4. If an emergency develops in an essential industry, chief reliance should be placed on emergency powers exercised through existing agencies; and

5. Any new legislation should prohibit strikes and lock-outs only after Government seizure, and adequate provision should be made for due process and just compensation, during Government operation, to both employer and employees.

Now, on the question of amendment of the act, I here and now recommend to the Labor Committee of the Senate, of which I am a member, the most careful and thorough consideration of the recommendations which Mr. Davis and his committee set out in that brilliant report of theirs. I recommend also to the Labor Committee that at the forthcoming hearings on proposals for amendment of the Taft-Hartley law men who know the business of labor relations, on labor's side and the employer's side, and particularly on the public's side, such as George Taylor, Harry Shulman, Will Davis, and the other great leaders representing the public at this conference, be brought to Washington for testimony based on their expert knowledge.

Now, before I close this address I wish to take just 2 or 3 minutes to express some observations as to the political implications of the Taft-Hartley law.

I have just finished a little speaking tour across the country in connection with the late lamented campaign. I made some 70 major speeches before many labor audiences. In those speeches I tried, as a constitutional liberal within the Republican Party, to tell American labor why I thought it should help elect a Republican President. It was very interesting. Results show that I was most unsuccessful. Labor didn't like the fact that a Republican-controlled Congress passed the Taft-Hartley law. Labor didn't like the failure of the Republican Party to make specifically clear just what amendments to the law it planned to offer and fight to pass through the next session of Congress if a Republican President were elected. A failure to take a clear-cut position on drastic revisions of the Taft-Hartley Act which are needed was very costly to the Republican Party in the election. The Republican Party speakers for the most part did not take specific stands on specific issues.

I didn't have to worry about discussing specific issues at my meetings—they were thrown at me, sometimes right between the eyes. My meetings were open forum affairs at which we discussed, for example, specific proposals for amending the Taft-Hartley law. I want to make this comment in all seriousness: Through the election we have seen a great example of democracy in action. Some of us may not like the results. I do not, but I refuse to ignore the results. I campaigned for my party because I am weary of liberals within the Republican Party who accept office from their party, hold high positions in the Republican Party, accept Republican committee assignments in Congress, and then at election time sulk in their tents because their party does not take their suggestions as though they spoke with the voice of infallibility. Such Republican liberals in the party have never grasped the full meaning, in my judgment, of the political ethics involved in party loyalty. The liberal must try to get his party into a position at election time so that it can assume full legislative responsibilities for the affairs of the Government. I think that is a test of political ethics which liberals within my party must be willing to meet if they are to accept the benefits that accrue to them as Republican officeholders.

I know there are those among the opposition party, as well as independent voters, who think I am inconsistent when I campaign for the Republican Party because as a member of the Senate I don't always vote with the recommendations of the Republican policy committee. My answer is that my party consists of the registered Republican voters of the party and not of the Republican policy committee. I am willing to let my voting record speak for itself as to whether or not it is consistent with the views and wishes of the majority of the Republican voters of the country.

As I sit in the Senate of the United States, the chairman of the Republican policy committee in the Senate, whoever he is, be he "BOB" TAFT or anyone else, will never cast my vote for me. The people of Oregon sent me to the Senate to cast my own vote on the merits of the facts involved in bills as they come before the Senate. They did not send me to the Senate to become a rubber stamp for the Republican policy committee.

I offer no apologies to this or any other audience for making the fight I made in the Senate of the United States on my side of the aisle against the Taft-Hartley bill. Subsequent events have shown that the position I took certainly was the position of the great majority, at least, of the overalls of America. It is time for politicians to stop thinking in terms of disfranchising the overalls of America, because the legs that carry the overalls also carry heads that know how to vote. Believe me when some Republican leaders tried to sell the bill of goods that it was only the labor leaders who didn't like the Taft-Hartley law they got their answer in the form of millions of votes against the Republican Party by the workers of the country on November 2, 1948.

Another fallacious argument that some Republican leaders have been making, in an attempt to rationalize their support of the Taft-Hartley law, is that the reduction in the number of strikes since the passage of the Taft-Hartley law is one of the direct beneficial results of the law. However, such an argument falls into the classification of a non sequitur fallacy. The politicians who, prior to the election, tried to convince the American people that there is a causal relationship between the Taft-Hartley law and a reduction of strikes since the passage of the law have simply illustrated once again the old tested formula that partisanship often blinds the partisan to the truth.

Thus, the politicians who voted for the Taft-Hartley bill and who are now confronted with the task of proving to labor that they knew what was best for labor, a la the Taft-Hartley bill, are defending their vote by pointing out that there have been fewer strikes since the Taft-Hartley bill was passed than there were during a similar period before it was passed. Oh, Aristotle, what fallacies are committed in thy memory.

Official Government labor statistics show also that during the period following the passage of the Taft-Hartley law national employment has increased. Surely the proponents of the Taft-Hartley law must be able to find some cause to effect relationship between the law and increased employment. It is no less a non sequitur to argue that because there have been fewer strikes since the passage of the Taft-Hartley law than there were for a similar period before its passage the Taft-Hartley law is the cause of the decrease in strikes.

It also is to be noted that the level of the cost of living has risen considerably since the passage of the law in spite of the flurry of recession in recent days. Surely the fact that the two phenomena have occurred in a close time relationship to each other must establish and bear out a causal relationship if we are to follow the logic, or lack of it, of the proponents of the Taft-Hartley law in respect to strike statistics.

Of course, when it is pointed out to the proponents of the Taft-Hartley law, who now are attempting to rationalize their votes on the basis of the decline in strikes since the passage of the law, that thousands upon thousands of American employers entered into evasive and subterfuge agreements with labor in order to get around the provisions of the law and avoid conflict with the workers over the act, their response is chiefly characterized by extra vocalization that doesn't even formulate itself into words.

When it is pointed out to these defenders of the Taft-Hartley law that there would have been strikes in major industries of this country whose labor contracts terminated after the passage of the Taft-Hartley law, if management in those industries had not yielded to the major economic demands of the unions in order to avoid a test under the Taft-Hartley law, these defenders of the Taft-Hartley law have a common reply; namely, "We just don't believe it." However, all they need to do is to talk to a cross section of employers who have signed labor agreements since the passage of the Taft-Hartley law. They will find that employer after employer will tell them, if they win his confidence, that he made many concessions which he is sure he would not have needed to make if he had not considered it so very desirable that he avoid a test with his union over the Taft-Hartley law.

Until courts pass upon various provisions of the act it cannot be said within a certainty just how far the parties to a labor agreement can go in contracting out from under the provisions of the act. However, there is no doubt about the fact that thousands of labor contracts have been entered into since the passage of the act which cannot be reconciled with the spirit and intent of Congress in passing the act. It certainly is clear that in passing the act Congress had no intention of passing a so-called private act but rather the putting upon the statute books a public-policy act frequently referred to throughout the debate as union-control law.

Prof. Edwin E. Witte, of the University of Wisconsin, and one of the top labor economists of the country, comments upon the doubtful legal status of the many labor agreements which seek to exclude by agreement of the parties the application of the Taft-Hartley law to the terms of the agreement as follows:

"An illustration of the present uncertainty surrounding the new law is afforded by the public statements which the two Members of Congress whose names this measure bears made concerning the agreement concluded recently between John L. Lewis' United Mine Workers and the bituminous coal operators of the country. Congressman HARTLEY denounced this agreement as a clear violation of the labor law, and warned the operators that they faced criminal prosecution and heavy penalties if they observed the provisions of the agreement. Senator TAFT thereafter gave it as his view that the coal agreement was not 'in any way a violation of the law,' and going beyond this, he cited the agreement as illustrating that under the new law 'employers and employees should be able to make any contract they want.'" (Edwin E. Witte, Labor Management Relations Under the Taft-Hartley Act, Harvard Business Review, autumn, 1947, p. 554.)

In the same article, on page 573, Professor Witte writes:

"What has been most disturbing to managements sincerely desirous of maintaining or developing better relations with their unions has been the bitterness the new law has aroused among the leaders of union labor and the stanch union members. It has opened old sores of extreme distrust of business, which had been pretty well healed. It also has confronted managements with the prospect of having to find a solution before long for difficult problems of labor-management relations arising out of the new law. Looming large among these are the union insistence upon eliminating no-strike clauses in contracts and the problem of what to do when union-security provisions expire. In this connection it is worthy of note that most of those management witnesses who in their testimony in the congressional hearings strongly condemned the closed shop never had such a provision in their contracts."

Then, too, there have been those employers who, since the passage of the law, have signed agreements without such collective-bargaining controversy because they have been very anxious to grant substantial increases in wages for a variety of reasons, such as their desire to maintain an inflated price structure, out of which they are reaping, at the expense of a long-suffering public, excessive profits. Such employers have followed the course of avoiding any stoppage of work by going along with labor for the most part, even though it has meant substantial increases in wages because they know the pattern of American industry since the end of the war has been to increase prices, at least twice the amount necessary, to take care of any increase in wages.

In many instances the increase in prices has been several times the amount necessary to pay for increased cost of labor. However, by granting a wage increase they have been able to pass along to the consumer greater than necessary price increases under the half-truth that increased labor costs require it.

Then there have been other employers who have followed the advice of certain employer and trade associations that now is not the time to challenge labor under the Taft-Hartley law. This antilabor group of employers, who fortunately, at least at present, represent a minority of American industry, are adopting the strategy of acceding to the major demands of labor for the time being until they can feed public opinion with another prescription of propaganda opiates which will becloud the public into thinking that maybe after all the Taft-Hartley law is good for labor.

This group of employers is well trained in industrial warfare and appreciates the fact that the timing of a battle often means the difference between victory and defeat. They know that their battle against strong unionism by use of the legal weapons provided in the Taft-Hartley law can easily be won in time of declining employment rather than in a period of expanding employment such as still characterizes the American postwar economy. The truth is that it is going to take 2 or 3 years for the Taft-Hartley law to show its legal effects and it is to be expected as long as full employment exists and labor's economic demands are generally complied with there will be few strikes resulting from the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law.

However, when recession starts in with its inevitable resulting unemployment the labor-relations picture will change and then the opportunity will present itself under the provisions of the Taft-Hartley law for those employers who wish to take advantage of organized labor to do so. Then industrial conflicts will move from the arena of a few court-test cases which are presently being carried on to the arena of economic industrial warfare. Labor will be at a disadvantage at first in that struggle, but as always it will learn the hard way and in due course of time another legislative record in defense of the legitimate rights of free workers will be written into the statute books of America as was the case when the battles of the Norris-LaGuardia Act and of the Wagner Act were won. Be that as it may, the fact remains that statesmanship has a great opportunity to help avoid that potential industrial war by proceeding now to revise in many major respects the Taft-Hartley law.

Now, I want to say something to you labor representatives in regard to the type of legislation to be passed by the Eighty-first Congress. You know my position. I told some of you when you came before the Senate committee in January, February, and March of 1947 that you let American labor down by taking the position that no legislation at all restricting labor excesses should be passed. I told you that you were acting outside of the framework of American public opinion, and that whenever any group in our society acts outside of the framework of American public opinion, be it business, labor, doctors, or any other group, the pendulum of public opinion tends to swing too far to another extreme. That is the only way one can explain how it happened that a Congress under heavy public demand for the passage of some labor legislation came to pass such an extreme bill as the Taft-Hartley law.

Now, what is going to be labor's position? The principle for which I stood in 1947 in urging fair legislation will not change one iota in the next session of Congress. My mind is open to considering the question of labor legislation on the basis of facts and the preponderance of evidence submitted to the committee for a new labor law. However, you will not find the junior Senator from Oregon taking the position that no labor legislation shall be passed. I shall vote for repeal of the Taft-Hartley law. As I said on the Senate floor, it should not have been passed in the first place. I refuse to call it names. Labor hasn't helped its case against the Taft-Hartley law by calling it such names as a slave-labor law. Labor needs to inform the public about the serious injustices of the law. It is proof of its unfairness and violations of legitimate rights of American labor which the public wants to hear about. Labor has a good case against the Taft-Hartley law but it has failed to date to explain its case to the public.

I shall always continue to talk of the Taft-Hartley law in terms of its specific injustices and weaknesses and what I consider to be some of its unconstitutional provisions. I am also going to vote for a substitute in the form of amendments to the Wagner Act. I am going to vote for the type of bill which will give us what we ought to have had by way of a new labor law in 1947, and on which American labor leaders should have helped. Labor leaders made it tough for us in the Senate time and time again in 1947. When some of us would get up and offer a proposal for changing the Wagner Act, the fairness and justice of which couldn't be denied, proponents of the Taft-Hartley bill would say, and rightly, "You can't even get labor's support for that proposal." They were right about it because labor leaders had missed taking the pulse of the American people and were so blinded by labor's own shortcomings that they didn't see that in the interest of American labor it was desirable to have a fair and balanced revision of the Wagner Act. In this next session of Congress, I shall again stand for the principle which I stood for in 1947, namely, that there must be an equal application of the law to all parties falling within the same operative facts involved in a given dispute. This means, of course, that we must have a piece of labor legislation that is fair and square to the legitimate rights of labor, the employers, and the public.

The labor leaders of this country should stand up now and do the greatest job of industrial statesmanship that can be done in America. They recognize that the Taft-Hartley law should be repealed, but they must also come forward and help those of us who are devoted to only one ideal in government—namely, making our democratic system work for the common good in passing a revised Wagner Act including those changes necessary to equalize the rights of employers and of labor. Such a bill along the lines of the Morse-Ives proposals should have been enacted in 1947 instead of a Taft-Hartley law. Unfortunately, the Morse-Ives bill was emasculated by more than 35 procedural changes adopted in conference committee and by certain amendments which were passed by the Senate before the bill ever went to the conference committee. However, the bill which was reported to the floor of the Senate by the Labor Committee and which consisted for the most part of a combination of the Morse-Ives bills should have received the cooperation of the labor leaders of the country. Without that cooperation the Taft-Hartley bill was the inevitable result. The administrative law approach of the Morse-Ives bill was changed by amendments into the common law court action procedure of the Taft-Hartley bill. The American people need to be informed as to why the social and economic problems of labor relations cannot be settled successfully by common law court actions. They need to be told why the Taft-Hartley law will not work.

The public is fair once it comes to know the facts about any issue. It must be informed as to the reasons that support the argument that if we keep the Taft-Hartley law on the books it will once again weave into the fabric of American industrial life the same old pattern of resentment against employers. On the basis of resentment there can be no industrial peace in this country. I am pleased to see that increasing numbers of employers, as I go about the country, are now pleading for modifications of the Taft-Hartley law, in the direction of putting into practice the basic principle of American jurisprudence for which I have raised my voice in defense, tonight, namely the same rules must apply to both teams. The Taft-Hartley law as well as the old Wagner Act violated that rule of equal justice for all.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Ching is quoted further in the article, as follows:

3. Fact-finding boards, being prohibited from recommending any settlement terms, are unable to mobilize public opinion behind the disputing parties to reach an agreement.

4. The emergency dispute requirement that workers must be polled on an employer's last offer has proved useless. The ballots are expensive to conduct, and the experience of a year demonstrates they do nothing to promote settlement; to the contrary, they are a disrupting influence in collective bargaining and mediation. They have been repeatedly rejected by the workers.

5. Parties in labor disputes are required by law to participate in conferences called by the Mediation Service. But there is no penalty. A few employees and unions have refused to cooperate.

Mr. President, in regard to the third point raised by Mr. Ching in his report, that "Fact-finding boards, being prohibited from recommending any settlement terms, are unable to mobilize public information behind the disputing parties to reach an agreement," I think once again he calls attention to a very important criticism of the Taft-Hartley law in its present form. In fact we were treated to a rather weird experience of the operation of this particular section this summer when for weeks, because of the emergency disputes section of the Taft-Harley law, the shipping industry of the west coast was tied up in one of the most costly strikes that has ever afflicted the west coast, a strike which the minimum estimates of cost—and I am sure they were minimum—indicated a loss of more than $4,000,000 a day to the parties concerned and to the shippers. That strike, taking place under the operation of the Taft-Hartley law, proved, if proof should ever be needed, the unworkability of the so-called emergency disputes section of that law.

What is provided, in essence, by that section of the law? There is the injunction, following the report of a fact-finding board. The fact-finding board is, however, prohibited from even making a recommendation as to how the dispute ought to be settled. One would think that one of the primary purposes of a fact-finding board, composed of a group of experts, after it obtained the facts, would be to advise the American people as to how a particular strike ought to be settled. But in that case we were confronted with a section of the law which specifically made it impossible for the fact-finding board to make recommendations to the American public as to what the next steps should be in solving that costly dispute, and if I may say, while I comment on that dispute, what I said across this country during the weeks it took place, there never was a time when that strike was justified either on the part of the union or on the part of the employers concerned. Both sides to that dispute permitted to come into the dispute irrelevant and immaterial issues that had nothing to do with free collective bargaining. The employers on one hand publicly announced through their representatives that they were out to break the union leadership; and there is no question about the fact that the union leadership on the other hand itself was taking a position on matters irrelevant to disputes over hours, wages, and conditions of employment.

I have said, in decisions in the past, I have said on the floor of the Senate, that a political strike is never justified in this country, and it seems to me in that great maritime strike there should have been in operation at the time a law which would have given, as Taft-Hartley law did not, the people of the United States effective relief from the type of strike that was involved in that instance. Rather, we have a law that says "The fact-finding board shall make its finding." But what happens after that? To reduce it to its skeleton, after the fact-finding board makes its second report to the President of the United States, which must be within 60 days after the injunction, and after a 20-day period during which a vote is taken on the employer's last offer, the injunction that is involved vanishes into thin air; the injunction evaporates. It ought to be obvious to anyone that the health and the safety and the welfare of the people are just as much at stake in a strike or in a strike situation after a fact-finding board reports, as before. Why should the injunction then automatically be dissolved?

What does the law then provide? It then provides that the President shall make a report to the Congress. In the case of that particular strike, which lasted about 95 days, so far as I know, we have yet to receive the report of the President to the Congress. Of course, the strike is now ended. The strike was ended because some great industrial statesmen, not direct parties to the dispute, outside the shipowners and outside the union concerned—in this particular instance, Mr. Phil Murray, for the CIO, and Mr. Almon Roth, for the Employers' Council of San Francisco—recognized that the particular procedure made available to them under the Taft-Hartley law was not worth the paper it was written on, proceeded to use their industrial statesmanship to call the attion of shipowners and the CIO union involved to the fact that a continuation of that strike could not be justified in the public interest. The result was that through the intervention of that kind of industrial statesmanship, but not through the Taft-Hartley law, that strike finally was settled. Never should it have occurred in the first place.

I want to say, as one who took a very active part in the Eightieth Congress in trying to bring about the enactment of legislation that would balance interests and protect legitimate rights, that I shall once again make a fight on the floor of the Senate and in committee for legislation that will protect the legitimate rights of American industry and of American labor; yes, also, Mr. President, and primarily, the interests of the public. That means that in my judgment we must have a drastic revision of the emergency-disputes section of the Taft-Hartley law, as well as the other major sections of that law. I repeat what I said during the campaign. I think the Taft-Hartley law was bad; I am convinced that it never should have been passed in the first place, and I recognize, as I think anyone who will read the handwriting on the wall should recognize, that it cost the Republican Party millions of votes in the last election—and it should have—because the "overalls" of America walked to the polls and made perfectly clear that they would register their resentment against a party primarily responsible for the passage of that law. It cost us one congressional seat after another. As I have said heretofore and now repeat, I think the farmers primarily cost us the Presidency; but the Taft-Hartley law cost us for the most part the control of both Houses of the Congress. In this session of Congress, we have the renewed obligation and responsibility of proceeding to work and vote for a law that will revise the Wagner Act. That causes me to make a comment that I know organized labor will not like, but I want to say from this seat today that organized labor, in the public interest, has no right to expect the Eighty-first Congress to repeal the Taft-Hartley law and merely replace it with the Wagner Act unchanged.

The junior Senator from Oregon, who need make no excuse for his defense of the legitimate rights of labor, once again, as he has from other platforms in America, serves notice that he is not going to vote for a labor legislative program which, in his opinion, cannot be reconciled with the public interests.

In my judgment, what the Wagner Act needs is the type of revision for which I fought in the Eightieth Congress, namely, legislation which will revise the Wagner Act, giving to labor—and mark this, Mr. President—giving to labor and employers the same procedural rights and safeguards which labor enjoyed under the old Wagner Act.

I repeat what some have heard me say before that any law which violates an elementary rule of the playground by providing that one set of rules shall apply to one team and that another set of rules shall apply to the other team is not a law which will solve any controversial subject, such as the problems of industrial relations.

Therefore, American employers are entitled to receive from the Eighty-first Congress those drastic procedural changes in the Taft-Hartley law that will give to them, under an administrative-law approach to these problems, the same rights which labor enjoyed under the Wagner Act. Mark you, Mr. President, that means a drastic change in the procedural approach to labor problems. It means that we discard what I say is the underlying motif of the Taft-Hartley law, in the last analysis, namely, the approach to labor problems through common-law court action. Common-law courts are not the proper tribunals in which to solve the economic, social, and human problems involved in labor relations. Wages, hours, and conditions of employment are basically not legal questions; they are basically social, economic, and human questions.

So we have a great challenge as Members of the United States Senate to proceed now to draft legislation which will replace the Taft-Hartley law. By all means it ought to be replaced. I, here and now, have incorporated into my remarks every syllable I uttered from the floor of the Senate in my fight against the passage of the Taft-Hartley law. I know of no vote I have ever cast in the Senate of the United States of which I am more proud, save and except one other vote of which I am equally proud. I refer in the latter case to my vote for the passage of the compulsory world court jurisdiction resolution through this body. I know of no other vote of which I am equally proud than my vote against the Taft-Hartley law and my vote to sustain the veto, because I think the evidence is cumulative in support of the propositions I fought for then, when I said on the floor of the Senate to the Senators on my side of the aisle during that debate, "Gentlemen, if you incorporate certain provisions into the law you will hear from it through the ballot boxes of America." They got their answer on November 2, 1948. They will get it again in 1950 and 1952, Mr. President, if my party once again makes the pattern of the Taft-Hartley law the labor policy of the Republican Party, because the workers of America, the independent voters of America, will never put their stamp of approval upon a law which has in it so many unworkable, unsound, and unfair provisions as has the Taft-Hartley law.

I say to the Senators on the other side of the aisle, Do not become intoxicated by victory. Do not indulge the assumption that you have any mandate from the American people to repeal the Taft-Hartley law and replace it with the Wagner Act without drastic change, because if that be the policy, dangerous as prophecy is, I am willing to prophesy today that the great body of the independent voters of the country will reach the conclusion that you have not been fair to the public interest.

The Eighty-first Congress, Republicans and Democrats, should be motivated by one desire, and that is to enact legislation that will return to the collective bargaining tables of America the symbol of peace by way of fair legislation, rather than the symbol of war, which the Taft-Hartley law is, in the field of industrial relations.

Therefore I raise my voice on the floor of the Senate to Republicans and Democrats alike to throw political strategy out the window in regard to labor legislation. Let us go forward as two great political parties dedicated to the proposition that what we need is legislation which will be fair to all sides concerned in industrial disputes, and thereby protect the public interest. To do that, Mr. President, we need, yes, repeal of the Taft-Hartley law, but at the same time let us enact a revised Wagner Act along the lines of administrative-law procedures which recognize that employers are entitled to the same procedural provisions which the old Wagner Act gave to the unions against employers.

THE LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT, 1947

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] has criticized the Taft-Hartley law in general terms, but he has specifically criticized the national emergency section of the law, to the general effect that it is unworkable because it did not work on the west coast in the maritime strike.

I very much like the approach of the Senator from Oregon to this problem, because he is now dealing with specific provisions of the law on their merits. If we can deal with each section and each problem involved in the Labor-Management Relations Act on its merits, and act on the merits of the various features of the act, I shall be more than satisfied, because I am quite clear that if the great majority of the individual issues are treated on their merits, it will result in a vote in favor of the provisions adopted by the Senate at the last session by an overwhelming vote.

As to the particular question of the national emergency section, of course, we faced a serious dilemma, when we entered upon the consideration of that provision. One of the questions was, should we prohibit a strike? Others were, is it possible to prohibit a strike and still maintain freedom? What procedure shall we provide? We finally reached a conclusion in the committee, I think probably to the complete satisfaction of no member of the committee, on a procedure by which a board would be appointed, and under which an injunction might delay a strike for 80 days, but after that, and after a vote indicating a determination to proceed, the men should be able to proceed.

I do not think any of us were particularly satisfied with that. The report and the bill were approved by the distinguished junior Senator from Oregon, who was one of the members of the committee who approved the bill as it was reported by the Senate committee. I do not remember that any important changes in this particular section were made after the bill was reported from the committee.

This is one of the main sections which the President himself desires to have retained, and of course it should be dealt with on its merits, and should be debated in the committee and on the floor of the Senate, so that we may obtain the best possible machinery for delaying or preventing a strike which involves a national emergency.

I call the attention of the Senate to the report of the Joint Committee on Labor Management Relations, headed by the distinguished former Senator from Minnesota, Mr. Ball, which deals with this question on pages 16 to 22, in which the committee discussed all the cases in which that section had been used. In general, I think it has been at least suggested in about 10 cases, and injunctions have been issued in 6. There was failure, in the case of the maritime workers, to prevent a strike. There was success in other cases.

The committee which had the function of determining the law has recommended two important changes, one of which is that which was referred to by the distinguished Senator from Oregon as advanced by Mr. Ching, head of the Mediation Service, who also appeared before the joint committee and recommended the changes. Those amendments will be found in the report, together with a proposal that the requirement of an actual vote on a strike be eliminated. The report deals on a factual basis with all the cases which have arisen under the act in all the different fields.

All I wish to say on this subject at this time is that I think we should proceed as the Senator from Oregon is proceeding, with a discussion of the different features of the law, and should determine each feature on its merits.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting the nominations of Dean G. Acheson, of Maryland, to be Secretary of State, and James E. Webb, of North Carolina, to be Under Secretary of State, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

INCREASE OF MEMBERSHIP OF CERTAIN STANDING COMMITTEES, ETC.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to submit a Senate resolution, and I ask that it be referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 24) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate as enacted in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 be amended as follows:

SECTION 1. The number of Senators on the following standing committees shall be increased from 13 to 15: Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, Committee on Armed Services, Committee on Finance, Committee on Foreign Relations, Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, Committee on the Judiciary, Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

SEC. 2. Paragraph (4) of rule XXV is amended to read as follows:

"Each Senator shall serve on two standing committees, and no more; except that no more than eight Senators of the minority party may serve on three standing committees, and no more, if one of such standing committees is the Committee on the District of Columbia, the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the Committee on Public Works, or the Committee on Rules and Administration; and except that Senators of the majority party who are members of any said five committees may serve on three standing committees and no more."

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I should like to explain the object of the amendment to the rules covered by the Senate resolution I have just presented. It proposes that eight committees of the Senate be increased in membership from 13 to 15, and it proposes an amendment in that section of the law which now prevents any minority Senator from holding membership on more than two committees.

There are two reasons why I think this change should be made in the Reorganization Act. In the first place, I think that in many cases a committee of 13 is too small a committee. Where there are, as in the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, four major subjects for consideration, and four major subcommittees, namely, on labor, education, health, and veterans, it is almost impossible for a Senator who serves on that committee to serve on two different subcommittees. Very much the same comment applies to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, which combines the former functions of the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Interstate Commerce. Very much the same is true in regard to the Committee on Appropriations. It is also true with respect to the Armed Services Committee, which combines the functions of two previously important committees.

In the second place, in endeavoring to allot memberships on the minority side in particular—and I think the majority is bound to admit this—we have found that the provisions of the act are so rigid that it is almost impossible to give every Senator an important committee assignment. The 15 committees were intended to be the same in importance, but they are not. There are three, or four, or five committees, membership on which is not sought, two or three of which are of lesser importance. The inevitable result is that the new Members of the Senate are assigned the committees of least importance.

Under the provisions of the act no member of the minority may hold membership on more than two committees. The majority is not so bound. There are 203 places on the committees, and 2 places to each Senator would make a total of 192. Therefore, 11 Members of the majority may serve on three committees, and they may be assigned to one of the least important committees. Thereafter the least important committees are gradually filled up. Roughly speaking, I should say that 10 of the committees are better than the other 5, and there would be a sufficient number of places on the major committees to give every Senator a place.

Before the Reorganization Act went into effect there was a rule which protected the junior Senators. Under that rule every Senator was entitled to membership on three major committees and two minor committees. Consequently, a senior Senator could not take all his committee assignments on major committees and leave only the minor committees for the junior Senators. The result of the present act, however, is that that is exactly what he may do.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUNT in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. If I recall correctly, the only exceptions, however, to a Senator, whether he be a member of the majority or minority, being allowed to be on more than two committees, is in respect to the Committee on the District of Columbia and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct. But the result is that the restriction is not nearly so severe on the majority as it is on the minority.

My proposal roughly is to increase the total number of committee seats by 16; and have 8 members of the minority able to serve on a third committee, and there would then be 19 members of the majority able to serve on a third committee, but only on a third committee of the second class, so to speak.

I submitted this matter to the majority before the committees were chosen, and pointed out the difficulties which have resulted in six of our members having membership on secondary committees, and no committee membership on committees of great importance. The majority does not desire to do anything at this time. I am submitting this matter to the Committee on Rules and Administration in order that it may be thoroughly discussed.

We have now had 2 years of operation of the Reorganization Act. Perhaps other changes should be made in the Reorganization Act, but in any event I hope very much that the Committee on Rules and Administration may give serious consideration to the rule so that present conditions may be adjusted, the work of the Senate may be somewhat more evenly distributed, and the situation will not prevail that a certain number of Senators have important jobs to do and a certain number of Senators are assigned to work which, while important, is not of the greatest interest. I hope, Mr. President, that the Committee on Rules and Administration will give consideration to this particular rule.

I may say that the minority—I think rightly so—2 years ago faced the problem we face now. That is true. The Reorganization Act was then a new act. No one had had any experience under it. No one knew how it would operate. The readjustments which would be required in any event were so tremendous that this particular matter was never considered at all, so far as I know. It was never presented to us. I think that, looking forward to the time when the majority will be the minority, they should also take an interest in seeing that such a change as this is made.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I must compliment the Senator from Ohio on having the long sight. He certainly is not nearsighted when he predicts that the majority will at any time within the foreseeable future become the minority of the Senate. Certainly he needs no nearsighted glasses in order to affect his vision at the moment.

I realize the difficulty which always arises when there is a change in the political control of the Senate, with respect to the assignment of committee memberships. We experienced it in a very drastic form 2 years ago when we had a wholesale exodus from the membership of most of our committees. When the Reorganization Act was passed it was the desire of the Senate, and of the Congress, to avoid a number of situations which had grown up like Topsy over a period of generations in the Senate, and also in the House.

One was the multiplicity of committees resulting in duplication, in various committees doing the same work, and the difficulty to draw the line of demarcation between the jurisdiction of committees, and also the membership of Senators on numerous committees. Frequently a Senator was on two or three, and in some cases four major committees, all meeting at the same time, and he had to exercise his own discretion as to which one of those committees he would attend. Obviously he was unable to function adequately and efficiently on all of them. That was one of the reasons why the Reorganization Act provided that no Senator should be a member of more than two committees, except in the case of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was not regarded as a major legislative committee, so far as the country generally was concerned, and the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, which had up to that time not assumed major proportions, but which is potentially one of the most important committees of the Senate. The purpose was to avoid having Senators serve on several important committees and being unable to attend all their meetings. Perhaps he would have no voice himself in determining when they should meet, and even if he did he would have difficulty in determining when the various committees of which he was a member should meet in order that he might attend all of them. So the Congress wrote the Reorganization Act to avoid that situation, to avoid duplication in the jurisdiction of committees, and to give a more efficient legislative over-all coverage of the committees and the membership of the committees.

I appreciate the embarrassment which any minority, after having been the majority of the Senate, experiences in the assignment of membership to the committees. But it works as well for one as for the other. Certainly the embarrassment on the Republican side is nothing to compare to ours 2 years ago when we were compelled to drop nearly every Senator from one or more of the major committees.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I may remind the Senator that the majority also had to drop many Senators from many major committees. I had to drop my membership on a committee on which I had served for 6 years. That was the Committee on Banking and Currency. In other words, the act required a complete realinement of all committees. I think this particular point, however, was not given very deep consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. When I was speaking of the majority I was referring to the party that had previously been in the majority, and had then become the minority party. Senators from both the majority and the minority had to give up memberships on committees. I had to give up memberships on two committees. I had to give up my membership on the Committee on Banking and Currency, on which I had served along with the Senator from Ohio, a committee on which I had enjoyed service since I was a Member of the Senate. I also had to give up membership on what is now the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I had served on the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce during the entire time I was a Member of that body. It was the only committee on which I served, because it was one of the 12 major committees, and membership on a major committee precluded the possibility of serving on any other committee. Two years ago I had to make a choice in membership on four major committees, and I chose membership on the Finance Committee and on the Foreign Relations Committee. That situation will exist every time there is a change in control.

I am not a member of the Committee on Rules and Administration. Even if I now were a member of that committee, I would not be a member long. Therefore, nothing I may say would necessarily bind that committee. But my fear is that in meeting a temporary situation at the beginning of every Congress we will whittle away at the Reorganization Act until we get back to the point where we were before the act was enacted—and that we will again have a large number of members on committees in order to meet some temporary situation that results in a hardship, but over a period of years it is no greater hardship on one party than on the other—until we get back to the point of duplication in the jurisdiction of committees.

What I am concerned about is that we may confront what an old judge in Kentucky used to speak of as the "numerosity" of membership on committees until we will come to the realization that there really is no Reorganization Act left. I believe the Committee on Rules and Administration will act on this matter. But I wish to express my fear, my anxiety, over the gradual whittling away of the Reorganization Act itself, which, on the whole, I think, has worked well. If we begin to tinker with it every time someone is dissatisfied or disappointed, or even a hardship is worked upon a Member of this body, we will gradually emasculate the Reorganization Act until there will be no Reorganization Act left.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I trust that the Senator from Kentucky, when he comes to consider the application of this proposal, will take into view what is, under prevailing rules, happening to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I have just looked at the list as announced today of the membership of the Committee on the District of Columbia, on the Republican side. I note with real interest that no Senator from the Republican side who has ever served on that committee before will serve on the District Committee during the Eighty-first Congress.

We are all conscious of the fact that the problems of the District are becoming larger and more difficult and awkward. Many Senators on both sides of the aisle are interested in the suggestion made by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT]. I think perhaps that somewhere within the suggestion we might find a real way in which to achieve a continuity of effort in the solution of problems which, if tackled on a temporary, 2-year basis, will never be solved.

Mr. President, I know that the Senator from Kentucky will be glad to study and consider the observation which I have made.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator.

Speaking of the Committee on the District of Columbia, of course, the District Committee is always a problem. I believe it was 4 years ago, when we were in the majority, that we placed on that committee every ex-Governor who came into the Senate as a member of the majority, on the theory that Governors had had more experience in government than other Senators, and therefore would be good members of that committee. I believe that they rendered excellent service on the committee. However, we cannot expect a Senator, whether he was ever a Governor or not, or whatever may have been his profession or official experience, or from whatever State he may come, to wish to remain on that committee forever. It is a committee which deserves the utmost consideration, because the people of the District of Columbia and the District of Columbia itself are the children of the Congress and of the Constitution. The Constitution makes the Congress the exclusive legislative body to consider District matters. Someday I may have something to say on that question, but not now.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I should like to make one further brief observation, if I may. The District of Columbia is a magnificent place as a city, as a symbol, and as an institution. If I may use the case of the junior Senator from Washington merely as an example; in the Eightieth Congress I served on three standing committees. One of those committees was the Committee on the District of Columbia. As a member of the minority party I must resign from one of the three committees on which I had previously served. There was no decision concerning choice to be made. I come to the Senate as a representative of the sovereign State of Washington, and therefore necessarily any decision must be made in favor of that constituency. But I think it is safe to say that my illustration is only an example of a number of other Senators on both sides of the aisle, who, when in the minority, if given an opportunity, would serve on the two national committees, and would say, "Certainly; if I can make a contribution I shall continue my membership on the District of Columbia Committee in addition to my other committee assignments, so long as the leadership deems it advisable."

Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky that I am serious in hoping that we can find an answer at this time—this year, if possible—which will insure an experienced Committee on the District of Columbia—for the fiscal involvement which surrounds and bewilders Members of Congress and administration officials of the city itself is in need of thoughtful attention and action which becomes more difficult of attainment as inexperienced committees undertake the task every 2 years.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, that is all I have to say.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator from Kentucky for yielding to me.

AUTHORIZATION FOR A COMMITTEE TO SUBMIT REPORT

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, it is my purpose to move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday. The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service wishes to consider a matter during the recess, and to be authorized to make a report. I therefore ask unanimous consent that that committee be authorized to report to the Senate during the recess any legislation it may agree upon, in the hope that the Senate may take it up on Thursday and consider it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

OUR TREATMENT OF THE NAVAJO INDIANS

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I shall take a few minutes today to explain the purpose of a bill which I introduced last Wednesday, Senate bill 170, for myself and the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS]. I think the bill and its subject matter of sufficient importance to merit a brief explanation at this time to the Members of the Congress and to the people of the United States.

Last year the American press printed many thousands of lines and hundreds of pictures in an effort to tell the present-day story of the deplorable conditions under which the American Navajo Indian is forced to live. Radio also played its part by bringing to the American listener a word picture of the situation in hundreds of broadcasts.

The reports of these agencies, it will be remembered, stirred deep and intense feelings in the hearts of all Americans. Our citizens arose and contributed tremendous quantities of material things—principally food and clothing—in an effort to ease the desperate situation of the Navajos.

The present condition of the Navajos—I like to refer to them as early Americans—is not of their own doing. They made way for the westward advance of the white man during the early colonization of this great country.

In a spirit of peace and in an effort to assure themselves of a future in this great new country, the Navajo Tribe signed a treaty of peace with the United States of America in 1868—just 80 years ago.

This 80-year-old treaty with the Navajo Tribe committed each party to certain conditions. The Indians primarily agreed to live within the area of the reservation and to live in peace with their white brothers.

The United States, on the other hand, agreed to set aside a reservation, about 30,000 square miles in area, where the Navajo could live.

This great Government also made certain other commitments in that treaty, one of which was to educate the children of the Navajo. We were to provide one teacher for every 30 Navajo children of school age.

What the United States has done for these people during this 80-year interval is next to nothing. They are still the most primitive people in the United States.

This Nation, which could fight a war on any of the seven seas, which has airplanes and men to fly them that can bomb any place in the world, which has a standing military strength of millions of men, and which has appropriated billions upon billions of dollars for the rehabilitation of the downtrodden people of the world, today has not taken the time nor spent the money—infinitesimal when compared with war and foreign monetary expenditures—necessary to help these western American Indians and to meet the terms of a treaty which we signed.

This Indian reservation lies in an area stretching from southeastern Utah into Arizona and New Mexico. The reservation is as large as the combined areas of the States of Rhode Island, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts.

The land on which these Indians live is so submarginal that it is impossible for them to achieve any reasonable economic standard. It has been estimated that at least half of the Indians should be moved off the reservation if the other half is to be permitted to attain any acceptable living standard.

Mr. President, I should like briefly to consider from the factual point of view the conditions under which the Navajos are forced to live, and then I should like to discuss my bill and emphasize its importance in the over-all Navajo problem.

The Subcommittee on Indian Affairs of the Senate Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs held hearings nearly a year ago to investigate and consider a possible program for the education and general aid of these Indians.

It was found at these hearings that reservation schools were not the entire answer to the educational needs of the Navajos. There are very few sites where schools can be located. There are practically no settlements of any size, as settlements are known in the West. There is a scarcity of water. Many times it is necessary to drill deep wells and pump the water to the surface, if a water supply is to be obtained at all.

It is not contemplated that educational facilities on the Indian reservation shall be abandoned. The educational program for the Navajos would provide on-reservation day schools which ultimately could take care of the needs of approximately one-half of the tribe.

It has also been found that it will be necessary to move at least half of these Indians, some 30,000, from the reservation to other localities where they may earn a living.

The Navajos have increased in number from about 8,000 when they were placed on the reservation at the end of the Navajo war following the days of Kit Carson, to approximately 61,000.

These Indians have made their scanty living in the past on the reservation itself, largely by keeping small flocks of sheep and goats and doing a little farming where rainfall would permit. The bleak Navajo plateau country is so short of rainfall that it grows but a small amount of forage.

The Indian Service found that it was impossible for all 61,000 of the Navajos to be maintained by the sheep industry, and that other means would have to be found to provide for at least half of them.

Mr. President, this is an emergency situation. There are 16,000 Indian boys and girls who should be in school. We cannot move too rapidly to discharge our duty to these unfortunate people. Our obligations under our treaty and under the dictates of humanity demand that we act at once.

Important as the Navajo program is, it is but one facet in the solution of the Indian problem confronting this country. While the over-all Indian problem is broad, we must start somewhere. My bill to transfer Bushnell is a move in the right direction. It is my intention to introduce subsequent bills dealing with the solution of other Indian problems.

A 10-year program was outlined to our committee last year. It provided for development on the reservation, but it did not offer adequate means for removing the 30,000 Navajos who must find homes elsewhere.

Before anything much can be done to help these people, they must be taught the rudiments of the English language, so that they may be able later to understand what is said and being taught to them by their teachers.

It is difficult for them to work among white people, simply because they cannot understand instructions that are given them about the work they are to perform.

Dr. G. G. Salsbury, who is head of the Presbyterian Ganado Navajo mission—a mission which, by the way, has done a great deal of practical good for these Indians over the years—gave it as his judgment that an emergency program should be instituted at once.

He said even temporary school plants, to teach this new generation of Indians the English language so that they might be given lessons and help in industry and vocational training, would be most beneficial. After that, they would be much more able to take care of themselves among the white people, where they would have to get most of their employment and livelihood.

Mr. President, a day's journey by bus to the north of the Navajo Reservation there is a military hospital, built by the United States during World War II, for the care of wounded soliders. It is located at Brigham City, in the very heart of agricultural and industrial Utah. This plant was built at a cost of more than $10,000,000. It is a permanent type of construction, with all modern improvements; in fact, it is a small but very modern city in itself. It is complete, with practically every facility needed, from fire station to a sewage disposal plant, recreational quarters, gymnasiums, swimming pools, picture houses, dormitories, officers' quarters, paved sidewalks and streets, and 26 acres of lawns, all located on a site of nearly 300 acres of some of the finest land in the State of Utah.

At one time during the war, nearly 4,000 wounded American soldiers were taken care of in this hospital. Immediately upon the close of the fighting, the Army decided the hospital was not located in the right place, or that it was no longer needed, and abandoned it. It was turned over the War Assets Administration for disposal.

That was in 1945. The War Assets Administration has been unable to find a suitable purchaser, either public or private, for this plant. It is costing the Government considerable money each year for caretakers and maintenance. It consists of 108 permanent buildings, which are in good condition.

Mr. President, I had held high hope that we might prevail upon the Army or the Veterans' Administration to reactivate this plant for the original purpose for which it was constructed. It seemed to me that this enormous expenditure of money should not be all in vain. However, all possibilities for utilizing Bushnell have been found to be impracticable, for a variety of reasons which I shall not discuss here.

The idea was then proposed by me to convert the hospital into a school for Indian children. Full advantage could be taken of all the physical facilities of this permanent institution, and, as a matter of fact, nearly 100 percent of its cost could be salvaged if it were used for such an institution

The matter was called to the attention of Acting Commissioner William Zimmerman, of the Indian Bureau. He, in turn, requested the War Assets Administration not to dispose of the plant, but to give the Indian Bureau an opportunity to investigate its possibilities.

Dr. Willard T. Beatty, head of the Department of Education of the Indian Service, and professional staff members, investigated the plant, and they came to the conclusion that it did have some very excellent possibilities as an Indian school site.

Members of the tribal council of the Navajos visited Brigham City. and, after a thorough inspection, became very enthusiastic about its possibilities. These men, who were sent to make the investigation on the ground, reported favorably to their superiors in Washington. Also, the people of Utah support the proposal.

The plan which has been outlined to date is to convert this hospital to an Indian vocational school for the education of the Indians of the nearby States, principally the Navajos, who are so badly in need of immediate facilities for educational purposes.

The bill I have introduced would authorize the War Assets Administrator to transfer Bushnell to the Department of the Interior for the purpose of establishing an Indian vocational school. This step was deemed necessary by legal authorities who have gone into the matter of the authority of the War Assets Administration to transfer the hospital, and likewise the authority of the Indian Service to receive it for the purposes named.

If this transfer is made, the Indian Service will be in a position to put the plant to almost immediate use. By "immediate," of course I mean such use as would come after a remodeling job has been done on the dormitories and after equipment necessary for the operation of the school has been put in place.

However, in order to get the fullest use of this plant—and all of it is needed—it will be necessary to construct some additional buildings, particularly classrooms.

The dormitories which were used for hospital beds and other facilities are readily adaptable for dormitories for Indian students. These dormitories should be used to their fullest extent, inasmuch as there are more than enough Indians to use the entire plant.

It is estimated that 2,000 students can be provided board and room in this institution, if the necessary classrooms are built nearby. There is ample room on the grounds for such additional school buildings as are necessary.

If immediate action is taken on this bill and if the necessary funds are provided as a deficiency appropriation, this plant could be put to use next September as a school, at least on a partial basis, even though the construction of the extra school buildings would not be completed by that time. Between 700 and 800 students, it is estimated, could use it during the construction period.

It is necessary to use to the limit all facilities that may be obtained for these Indians. I cannot emphasize too strongly that these boys and girls, future Americans, should not have so much of their lives spoiled by our delay in getting them into schools.

I think the American people are determined that an adequate program shall be provided for these people, so that they may have the same right that other American boys and girls have been enjoying for years, the right to an education.

Time is of the essence. Even a year saved will be of great value to these people. No one can measure its value in dollars and cents.

If this plant is accepted by the Indian Bureau and if Congress appropriates the necessary money for construction of the extra buildings and furnishing them with the needed equipment, at least a year and possibly 2 years will be saved in getting into a school at least 2,000 of the 16,000 Navajo children not now in school. The time of these 2,000 young people is important.

I urge that the committee to which this bill has been referred give it immediate attention. Upon its report to the floor of this body, as I believe it will be reported with a favorable recommendation, I shall ask that it receive immediate consideration.

I shall further urge, upon its passage, that the Congress of the United States, in the deficiency appropriation bill, appropriate sufficient funds to permit the immediate commencement of construction of the necessary school buildings. I shall request that the deficiency appropriation bill contain items for the construction of the necessary school buildings, so as to permit the utilization of this plant to its fullest extent, and also that the bill provide funds for remodeling and for equipping it, so that it may be put into use, even if only partially, by September 1949.

As a matter of fact, establishment of an Indian school at Bushnell would save the Government millions of dollars in new school-building construction. It also would serve as an excellent foundation upon which to build an off-reservation educational program for the Indians.

Mr. President, I have supported Federal aid to education. I voted for the bill when it was before the Senate last spring, and I shall vote for Federal aid to the States for the purpose of helping the children of this land. I am convinced that it is necessary. Indian education, which we have agreed to give by solemn treaty, has just as much merit, if not more.

It is true that the utilizing of these buildings will still leave 14,000 Navajo Indian children without school facilities. I intend to present other programs to put these youngsters into school in the near future. The Bushnell Indian school proposal is a beginning. We should take this step now and be ready to adopt a wider and larger program for the 14,000 not taken care of by this particular program.

Mr. President, I shall now conclude, but in so doing, I should like to leave with the Members of this distinguished body the wisdom expressed many years ago by an unknown western Mormon pioneer:

> The Indians are better than many of the whites—the Indians may scalp their enemies, but they don't skin their friends.

Mr. President, the News-Journal, of Brigham City, Utah, successor to the Box Elder News and the Box Elder Journal, recently published an editorial regarding the use of Bushnell Hospital for an Indian school. I ask unanimous consent to have the editorial published in the RECORD, following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of Texas in the chair). Is there objection?

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WE'RE FOR THEM

Being only human, we are all afraid and suspicious of things we don't know and understand.

When we think about a Government Indian school at Bushnell, here at our very doorstep, we can't help wondering just how it will affect us. All of us like our town the way it is. The people we know we like, and the people we don't know—possibly the reason is because we're afraid we wouldn't like them—give us no trouble.

We have a good thing, here, in this community. And our first inclination is against sharing it with anyone else, against accepting any changes.

And would you believe it, the Navajos are just like us, they're afraid and suspicious of things they don't know and understand. They can't help wondering how we, as a community, will affect their young people if they should be sent to a boarding school adjacent to our town.

Can you imagine that? A little afraid, a little suspicious of us? Why, we're the best people in the world.

Take John Jones (providing there isn't a John Jones—if there is, make it Alexander Jones), when he moved to town, a few years ago, we were suspicious of him. He might complicate our smooth and satisfactory existence, in some way. He might compete with us for something we want—and be too tough competition, or at least make us extend ourself. We didn't bother to get to know him, right away. After all, we had plenty of friends.

Then, somehow, we got acquainted with Mr. Jones. He became a customer of ours, or he offered us a job, or he tackled one of those nonpaying community betterment assignments and did a good job of it. We couldn't believe it possible at the time, but we have a better town, and a better life, and one more friend, because Jones came to town.

Logic and reason make no difference. We're a little suspicious of the unknown, always have been and always will be, because we're human.

And so are the Navajos for the same reason.

The wise men of the Navajo Tribal Council who visited our town yesterday had their suspicions allayed for the most part. And they did much to allay our own suspicions. Of all the things we might have expected them to be, we were hardly prepared to find them to be just what they were—ordinary people, "God's chillun," just like the rest of us. Some of them were uneducated, but talking with them you realize once again that it is the wisdom of the years and experience that really counts.

And in all of their hearts—indeed, worn on their sleeves—is one burning desire: That their children shall have an education and opportunity, that they shall, after generations, claim the lost heritage that first was theirs, to have and hold, and live full American citizenship. These fine, wise, mild-mannered, bright-eyed Indian men, hold as their highest ambition a hope that their children may have a better, fuller life than they themselves have had.

Is that so much different from the rest of us?

Frankly, we're for them. Even if it doesn't mean a penny's business to Brigham City, even if there's nothing in it for anyone now living here, we still hope the Navajos can have the spendid school for 1,500 to 2,000 of their children that is possible with the excellent facilities at Bushnell.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I want first to say to my good friend from Utah that I am glad to assure him of my cooperation again on this Indian matter, as I have cooperated with him in the past on other Indian matters. I am aware of the valuable work he has been doing on the committee that has charge of Indian affairs. I think he knows of my view on the general proposition, that it is incumbent upon us to give to the Indians of the country a full measure of freedom and also of the responsibility that goes along with freedom, because I hold again to the view I expressed before, that one of the great needs, so far as taking care of civil rights in this country is concerned, is to be found in connection with our Indian affairs. I hope to see the time in the not too distant future when we shall make very clear to the Indians that they must also assume the responsibility of a granted citizenship, and I hold fast to the view that one of the great contributions we could make for greater efficiency in our Government would be to have a drastic overhauling of the Indian Bureau. I am satisfied that what has happened over the years is that we have really built up a counterpart, so far as the Indian Service is concerned, of another WPA, and I am for taking the Indians off "WPA" and granting to them as rapidly as possible full and complete freedom and citizenship.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the Senator from Oregon for what he has just said, and express to him my appreciation of the support he gave our program during the Eightieth Congress. It was very helpful indeed.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE

Mr. MORSE. It was a pleasure to support it.

Mr. President, I really arose to make brief comment on another matter. I do not usually talk twice in one day on the floor of the Senate, but I am going to have to leave the city on business at the close of the day, and I wanted the RECORD to show the following comments before my return.

Mr. President, last Wednesday I submitted my antifilibuster resolution (S. Res. 12), and a number of other Senators also submitted resolutions on the same subject. My purpose in rising at this time is to urge that the first item of business of the Committee on Rules and Administration, after the committee is organized, be the consideration of these resolutions, because, as I have said many times, I believe it is of the utmost importance that this matter of amending the Rules of the Senate be considered and accomplished as early as possible in the Eighty-first Congress.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the body of the RECORD at this point an editorial which appeared in yesterday's Washington Post, entitled "Curb on Filibusters."

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CURB ON FILIBUSTERS

Now that the House of Representatives has curbed the powers of its Rules Committee to veto legislation before it reaches the floor, the Senate can scarcely do less in liberating itself from the filibuster. Many Senators are alert to this necessity. On a single day last week five resolutions proposing amendments to the existing ineffectual cloture rule were introduced. Certainly the public is eager to see this reform put into effect. The time is ripe for its sponsors to press their case with all the vigor they can command.

All the resolutions offered last week would effect some improvement over the present helplessness of the Senate in the face of a talkfest. But the majority of them would merely extend the operation of cloture upon a two-thirds vote. Obviously, this would leave the major defect in the present system untouched. Under the existing requirement for a two-thirds vote, cloture has been adopted only 4 times out of 19 tries since 1917. In other words, cloture applied by a two-thirds vote is little better than no restraint at all on filibusters.

In principle, moreover, the two-thirds provision is wrong. It means that the action of the Senate, when a filibuster gets under way, may be controlled by the minority instead of the majority. That is the negation of democratic practice. If we believe in representative government, surely a simple majority can be trusted to make the decision as to when debate should be ended no less than to make other decisions. In these days when rapid action must often be taken to cope with an emergency, and when Congress is always faced by more needed legislation than it can possibly enact, the only argument that can be made for the two-thirds cloture rule is that obstruction of the democratic process is sometimes justified. And that argument seems to us indefensible.

Fortunately, two of the proposed amendments—those submitted by Senator MYERS and Senator MORSE—would permit the closing of debate by majority vote. Senator MYERS would limit each Senator to 1 hour of debate after a cloture motion had been voted. Senator MORSE would allow 2 hours. Neither limitation would work any real hardship, for the Senate has usually debated a bill thoroughly before any thought of invoking cloture arises. To assume that the Senate would throttle itself by this device seems absurd to anyone who knows the tradition of unlimited debate in that body. Rather, the proposed rules would save the Senate from making a ridiculous spectacle of itself when the country is demanding action in place of talk.

Mr. MORSE. I should also like to observe, Mr. President, that on Wednesday last I requested unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of my resolution, but that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL], my very good friend, of whom I am very fond, objected.

Let me say, Mr. President, that I asked for immediate action on my resolution because during the special session of Congress the Republican Senators in conference assembled agreed to a motion, which was released to the public, notifying the American people that, come the first session of the Eighty-first Congress—and at that time we were of the opinion we would be in control of the Senate of the United States—the first item of business which we as Republicans proposed to take up was a resolution eliminating the filibuster from the Senate of the United States. There is some division among us as to just what the procedure should be, but there is no division on this side of the aisle as to the desirability and necessity, if we are really going to have the people's business transacted in the Senate of the United States, of having an antifilibuster resolution adopted at the earliest possible date. And of course the record is perfectly clear that, over the years, the barriers and blocks which have been thrown in the way of an antifilibuster resolution being adopted by this body have come almost invariably from the Democratic side of the aisle. I think it is very important that the American people understand first that it was the Republican program for the Eighty-first Congress to make an antifilibuster resolution the first major item of business in that session of Congress. To keep faith with the spirit and intent of the action taken by the Republicans in conference last summer, I last Wednesday asked for immediate consideration of my antifilibuster resolution. I wanted the record made clear again as to where the objections came from, and once again the objections came from the Democratic side of the aisle. I venture to suggest that that is where the objections are going to come from again, as we go into this matter in the first session of the Eighty-first Congress. But let us get the record perfectly clear from the very beginning. My good friend from Georgia, in objecting to immediate action of my antifilibuster resolution the other afternoon, among other things stated in substance that use of the filibuster had not over the years in any single instance resulted in material damage to the interests of the Nation. In this connection, I wish to call attention to a very able study of the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress, Public Affairs Bulletin No. 64, entitled "Limitation of Debate in the United States Senate," prepared by George B. Galloway. We find in that bulletin that an incomplete listing shows 37 major bills, some of them on three or four different occasions, have been defeated by the filibuster. This list does not include numerous appropriation bills that were talked to death. A partial list of such bills that failed because of the filibuster totals 82 between 1876 and 1916.

While I recommend to my colleagues that they give careful study to this excellent bulletin, I think it would be helpful if at this point in the RECORD there appeared the tabulation of legislation defeated by filibusters as shown in that bulletin at pages 20 and 21. Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that that tabulation be printed in the body of the RECORD, as part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Legislation defeated by filibusters[1]

Numerous appropriation bills. For a partial list of 82 such bills that failed from 1876 to 1916, see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 28, 1916, pages 10152–10153.

[1] 37 bills appear in this incomplete list, not including the many appropriation bills that have either been lost in the jam that resulted from filibusters or were talked to death because they failed to include items that particular Senators desired for the benefit of their States or because grants they made were considered excessive. Several successful filibusters have sought and achieved the enactment of legislation favored by the filibusterers. Filibusters have succeeded not only in preventing the passage of legislation, but also in preventing the organization of the Senate, the election of its officers, and the confirmation of Presidential appointees. They have also succeeded in modifying the terms of legislation; in delaying adjournment of Congress; in forcing special sessions, the adoption of conference reports, of neutrality legislation, and of a ship subsidy; in postponing consideration of legislation, and in raising the price of silver. Legislation has also often been defeated or modified by the mere threat of a filibuster.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should merely like to say to the able Senator from Oregon that I think he is performing a very useful service both to the Senate and to the country in bringing up the matter of the necessity of making a change in the existing rules of the Senate. I speak as one of the minority members of the Senate Rules Committee. While there may be some honest difference of opinion as to what procedure should be followed in closing the loopholes which now exist in the rules, I think all of us will agree that under the present precedents of the Senate we have no cloture whatever in the Senate of the United States. So long as a filibuster may be conducted against a motion to take up a bill, not even two-thirds of the Members of the Senate can bring to a close the debate whenever it is the desire of one man or a small group of men to obstruct the legislative process.

I hope that the able Senator from Oregon will direct a communication to the able Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], who is the new chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and request an immediate hearing on his proposed amendment to the rules. I can say to the Senator from Oregon that I have today addressed a communication to the Senator from Arizona as chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, asking for an immediate hearing on amendment of the rules offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL] on behalf of himself, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], and myself, the junior Senator from California. I think that all of these measures should be brought before the committee during the first week the committee is functioning, so that whatever is reported by the committee may be brought to the floor of the Senate during the month of January; and if we are to have a filibuster on some correction of the present rules of the Senate, then let it come immediately, and not later in the session, when it may obstruct important public business.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I am very glad to have the views of the able Senator from California. He has been one of the leaders on our side of the aisle in the fight to do something about changes in the present rules which permit filibusters as a practice on the floor of the Senate. I wish to say to the Senator from California that I shall continue to work to that end. There is a difference between the resolution of which he is one of the coauthors and my resolution, to which I shall direct my attention momentarily.

I have heard the Senator from California say—and he is quite correct—that it is not safe, from the standpoint of this country, and I paraphrase his statement, to give any small group of men the tremendous power that such a group has in the Senate of the United States when they organize a filibuster. Many of us have said the same thing in different language forms.

On this side of the aisle we considered the subject in the Republican conference last July and came out with the unanimous opinion that it should be Republican policy to take steps necessary to try to force action on an antifilibuster resolution.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I am in hearty agreement with what the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] has said and with what the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] has said. In 1942, at the end of a filibuster, I declared myself by saying that there comes a time when any self-respecting legislative body should stop talking and should vote. The defect in our rules has not been corrected up to this time. I hope that the Republican policy committee will take early action to bring the subject to a focus so that we can debate it in January, when we shall not be very busy, and there will be plenty of time to discuss all phases of the proposed changes in the rule.

I thank the Senator from Oregon for yielding to me.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Kansas for his assistance and for his contribution to the debate.

I have only a word or two more to say on this subject at this time. I want to direct my attention to the proposal which I understand the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN] is supporting. Being chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, his support is, of course, a matter of considerable weight, so far as action of the Senate is concerned. The Senator from Arizona talked to me regarding his proposal a day or two ago, and I told him I could not accept his proposal, because it was not a solution of the problem which confronts us, and that, in my judgment, his proposal will simply delay action for a long period of time, that it will be dilatory in its nature, and will be encouragement to further delay because it does not come to grips with the fundamental issue. Of course, there should be a change in the rule so as to provide that any item of business in the Senate, whether it be the approval of the Journal, a motion, or no matter what it be, shall be subject to a cloture motion. The Senator from California is correct when he says that in the rules today there is no effective rule on cloture.

Mr. President, we cannot get away from the objective data on the subject. The solution offered by the Senator from Arizona, in my judgment, is no solution at all, because the solution we must have is one which makes it possible by a majority vote to stop debate in the Senate and proceed with the people's business, guaranteeing, at the same time, sufficient time for the minority to seek to change itself into the majority. The Senator from Arizona does not propose to give to the Senate the power by majority vote. He seeks to retain the two-thirds vote requirement. I say, Mr. President, that the statistics are all against him, and demonstrate that such a requirement is not an effective measure. Even to the extent we can apply cloture under the present rule, Mr. President, in applying it to measures since 1917 the record shows that it has been possible to get a two-thirds vote only four times.

Mr. President, I want to participate in something more than a mere sham. I think filibustering should be stopped in the Senate of the United States. The way to stop it is to give to this body the power, by majority vote, to stop debate and, at the same time, amend the rules so that the minority will be adequately protected.

For future reference, let us quickly go through the procedure to which I am referring. My resolution, Mr. President, would require 16 Senators to sign a cloture petition before action could be obtained. As we watch the Senate in actual operation, it will have to be a matter of great moment—it must be made perfectly clear that the time has come to take action on limiting debate—before 16 Senators will put their signatures on a petition to end debate. But when, in the view of 16 Senators, debate should end, and a majority of the other Senators agree that debate should end following the filing of the cloture petition, plus a guaranty to the minority that every Senator on the floor shall have 2 hours in which to debate the merits, after cloture, and shall have the right to farm out all or part of his time to any of his colleagues, we shall then have an effective check on filibustering, and certainly, Mr. President, we shall have an effective rule which protects both the majority and the minority.

I shall urge, Mr. President, that consideration be given to the majority-vote principle, because a retention of the passage of cloture by a two-thirds vote will not give us the results we need, for we cannot marshal on many occasions, particularly those which involve such issues as full constitutional protection to all our citizens through civil-rights legislation, the necessary two-thirds vote, which is presently required.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that the Committee on Rules and Administration will give full hearing to the proposition that cloture be passed by action of the majority of the Senate, and that then each Senator have the privilege of speaking for 2 hours or farming out his time, so that the minority and the country can be amply protected on a given issue.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no intention of engaging in a partisan debate over the question of cloture. It is a matter about which neither party can contend that it has a clean record altogether, because historically over a period of years, involving a generation or more, neither party has been clear-handed in regard to the use of the device of the filibuster.

I recall that many years ago the Congress automatically adjourned every other year on the 4th of March, so that whether the business of the session was concluded or not it had to adjourn. Many times Senators took advantage of that fact to filibuster in the late hours or days of a session against some measure to which they were opposed, and there was no particular priority on the part of either party as to the use of that device. I have a very vivid recollection of it being used on many occasions by members of the party across the aisle.

I have fought the filibuster ever since I have been a Member of the Senate, and I have been the victim of several filibusters which I undertook to stop, but I was not always successful in doing so. I have frequently announced myself in favor of such rules, or such fair interpretation of the present rules, as would give the Senate power to do business whenever it was ready to vote. I have always felt that the filibuster was an anachronism, that it had no place in a democratic legislative body. As a matter of fact, the effort to secure cloture usually takes place after there has been full debate, and not before there has been full debate.

I have already spoken to the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration in regard to bringing in an amendment to the rules as soon as possible. There is no guaranty that it would be the first matter taken up, because no one knows what committees will bring in measures, or whether they will bring them in at all, but I think I can say that the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration, intends to give the promptest consideration to this proposal.

With respect to the amendment to the rule offered by the Senator from Oregon, he charged the Democratic side with responsibility for its lack of consideration the other day. Of course, the Senator from Oregon knew when he asked for consideration he could not get an important matter like that taken up by unanimous consent without committee consideration, because his proposal was entirely different from that which had theretofore been considered. So the fact that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. RUSSELL] objected to the immediate consideration of the resolution carries with it no political implication except that the Senator from Georgia, in the exercise of his right, felt that that sort of a resolution should not be considered on the floor immediately without going to the Committee on Rules and Administration, which had already had referred to it other proposals of the same kind.

As to the Senator's proposal that each Senator have 2 hours, and that he be allowed to farm out his 2 hours to some other Senator, that does not strike me, I am frank to say, with much force. Under the proposal that each Senator be allowed 1 hour, if every Senator desired to talk about any pending proposal, that would mean 96 hours of debate. We might say that every Senator would not talk about the matter, but every Senator would have the right to talk about it, and that would mean 96 hours, and dividing that among the days in which we were likely to be in session, it would mean that there would be at least 2 weeks before there would be a vote on the proposal on which cloture was sought or had been voted.

If each Senator were allowed 2 hours, that would means 192 hours of debate, and if each Senator were allowed to farm out his 2 hours, and if we assume that half the Senators would farm out their 2 hours, it would mean that 48 Senators would have 4 hours each if they desired to use it to debate a proposal after cloture had been voted.

Mr. President, it seems to me that would not bring about as prompt a consideration of the final determination of the matter on which cloture had been voted as should be brought about.

I have always felt that 1 hour for each Senator is enough, after there has been ample debate. We assume there will have been ample debate when a cloture petition is filed, and that 96 hours is sufficient, and that 1 hour is enough for each Senator. I do not believe that the 2-hour proposal, with the right to farm out time, is in the interest of speeding determination of legislation after there has been debate to such an extent that the Senate would be willing to vote cloture, either by two-thirds vote or majority vote.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I appreciate the Senator's point of view. I would, however, call his attention to two points, namely, that if such a rule as I am proposing were adopted, the Senate would then have a rule which would make definite and certain a terminal date, a time for the end of debate, and I think that is all we need in order to stop a fillibuster, that is, have the Members of the Senate know that, come a certain day and a certain hour, automatically debate will end. In my judgment, my 2-hour rule would give ample time for Senators to state their views on the merits of the pending question, it would give the country ample time to be heard from, and it would not stop the Senate from transacting other business. I think the Senator from Kentucky has overlooked that point.

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not understand it possible to fix a definite date for the termination of debate so long as 96 Senators have the right to debate 2 hours. It would all depend on how long the Senate remained in session each day, and how many Senators desired to utilize 2 hours each. As the Senator has just suggested, other business might be transacted which would itself tend to postpone a final vote upon the matter on which every Senator had 2 hours for debate, and half of them 4 hours if the other half decided to yield their time to the other 48 Senators.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield for a comment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. If the language needs to be changed in order to carry out the intention, I shall be happy to have that done, but the intention is to have the clock start ticking the moment the Senate adopted the cloture petition.

Mr. BARKLEY. It is not necessary to amend the rule in order for the clock to start ticking, if cloture is adopted.

Mr. MORSE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The point is that the number of 2-hour speeches or the number of 1-hour speeches which could be made in any one day would depend on the length of time the Senate was in session on that day. If it were in session 4 hours, it might be assumed there would be four speeches. If it were in session 6 hours, there might be six speeches, if 1 hour was the limitation; or a shorter session would bring fewer speeches, which would postpone the final vote. So that so long as each Senator has an hour or 2 hours it is impossible to fix an hour, or a day, on which there could be a final vote, until it had been determined that no other Senator wished to exercise the right to speak under the cloture rule, whether it be 1 hour or 2 hours.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should like to say to the able Senator from Kentucky, who is soon to leave the floor of the Senate and to preside over its deliberations, that I can testify that on a number of occasions he has been vitally interested in finding some way to terminate a filibuster, as were some of us on this side of the aisle. But I also wish to point out to the able Senator from Kentucky, and I think he will agree to this, that if we are ever to get an amendment to the rules of the Senate we should endeavor to get it very early in the session, because unless the amendment is brought to the floor very early, we are then faced with the problem of appropriation bills, of the new ECA legislation, of other aid to Europe, perhaps in armaments, of social-security legislation, and the pressures become so great that there is a tendency to drop the fight to correct the rules in order to pass legislation dealing with other public business.

It seems to me that if there is the will to adopt a resolution providing for such a change in the rules of the Senate—and I know the able Senator himself desires such a change—on the part of both the majority leadership of the Senate and the minority leadership, they can bring the amendment of the rules to the floor within a very short period of time, and then instead of recessing for 3-day periods in the early part of the session, when there is ready for consideration very little legislative business, if the Senate should be kept in session each day to a reasonable hour in the evening, and, if a filibuster develops, should hold, if necessary, all-night sessions, before the legislative calendar becomes too cumbersome, then I think we would have a reasonable opportunity, working together, to close this loophole in the rules which I am sure the Senator from Kentucky recognizes exists.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator from California, and I agree with him that the proposal ought to be brought before the Senate promptly. I recall what happened in the last Congress. The matter of bringing in a rule to amend the rules was taken up in the committee early in that session, and the proposed amendment to the rule was reported to the Senate months before the end of the Congress and placed on the calendar. No one, however, made any effort to get it up. It might be said that anyone on the floor of the Senate could move to take up a certain matter that is on the calendar, and that is true. But the responsible leadership on the other side, which was then the majority, made no effort to bring it up. I can understand that, because it came in at a time when other matters of importance were under consideration, and therefore, I suppose, anticipating a very lengthy debate on the matter, it was thought expedient not to undertake to bring it up at that session. I recall the notice served by the then Republican majority in its conference that they were going to start something, inaugurate a movement of this kind quickly, as soon as they got back in the present session, but I think that was a sort of a death-bed confession, in view of the fact that nothing had been done in two whole years, and it turned out to be more of a death-bed confession than was at the time thought possible, I suppose.

At any rate, no matter who is responsible, or how many filibusters there have been, or on what side they originated, I agree wholeheartedly that the rules of the Senate should be amended, if it is necessary to amend them in order that this body may transact business. It is the only legislative body in the world where a single individual or a few individuals can interfere with the orderly procedure in regard to the consideration of legislation, to the point where the Senate can never vote on a measure which an overwhelming majority might favor. That does not apply to any particular type of legislation. It applies to anything that may come before the Senate.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

MONDAY, JANUARY 10, 1949

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Dr. Edward H. Pruden, pastor of First Baptist Church, Washington, D. C., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, as we begin a new week and a new legislative day we pause to acknowledge Thee as the source from whom all our blessings come, and to seek that leadership of Thy Holy Spirit without which we shall surely go astray. May Thy blessing be upon the Members of Congress and upon all legislative bodies everywhere that men of good will working together in every nation may establish peace in the earth. We pray, our Father, that Thou wilt help us to recognize the tremendous significance of the responsibilities which rest upon us; and in deep seriousness of purpose and in a dedication to the God of all mankind may we approach our tasks today. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, January 7, 1949, was read and approved.

THE BUDGET—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 17)

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am transmitting my recommendations for the budget of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950.

Under the laws of our country, the budget, when approved by the Congress, becomes the plan of action for the Federal Government. It thus embodies decisions of tremendous importance, particularly in these times, to the American people and to the entire world. The preparation of the budget is one of the most important duties of the President. It represents a carefully prepared plan for carrying out the many activities and services of Government which the Congress has authorized, and others which I am recommending, in response to the needs and desires of the American people.

This is the fourth budget prepared since the close of World War II. The character of the postwar world still presents many complex problems and unanswered questions. This budget is the clearest expression that can be given at this time to the program which the Government of the United States should follow in the world today.

It is founded on the conviction that the United States must continue to exert strong, positive effort to achieve peace in the world and growing prosperity at home. Substantial direct assistance is provided for other members of the family of nations, and expenditures in support of our armed forces are materially increased. Funds are included for the necessary strengthening of our economy through the development and conservation of the Nation's productive resources. Increased emphasis is placed on the provision of badly needed measures to promote the education, health, and security of our people.

To support this program, the budget provides for expenditures of 41.9 billion dollars for the fiscal year 1950, about 1.7 billion dollars above the requirements for the present year. Under existing law and with continuing high levels of economic activity, revenues for the fiscal year would be 41 billion dollars. This would result in an estimated deficit of 873 million dollars.

In a period of high prosperity it is not sound public policy for the Government to operate at a deficit. A Government surplus at this time is vitally important to provide a margin for contingencies, to permit reduction of the public debt, to provide an adequate base for the future financing of our present commitments, and to reduce inflationary pressures. I am, therefore, recommending new tax legislation to raise revenues by 4 billion dollars. Because of the normal lag in the collection of taxes, however, tax receipts in the fiscal year 1950 would be considerably less.

In presenting this financial program to the Nation, I have carefully considered the present economic situation of our country and the effect upon it of large Government expenditures. The Economic Report, submitted recently to Congress, emphasized the compelling need for financial prudence by the Government at this time. The actions taken in preparing this budget reflect that policy.

Because of heavy prior commitments requiring larger expenditures for a number of continuing programs in the fiscal year 1950 and the presence of inflationary forces in our economy, it has been necessary to deny many requests for additional funds which would normally be desirable. Necessary increases in our national defense program are expected to result in additional expenditures in 1950 of 2.5 billion dollars, or 21 percent, over 1949. Public works already authorized and now under way also require higher expenditures. Despite these and other unavoidable increases, the total expenditures contemplated for 1950 are only 1.7 billion dollars above the level of the present fiscal year.

Within the framework of this budget, provision is made for inaugurating certain essential economic and social programs which should no longer be delayed. An estimate of 290 million dollars is included for aid to education. An additional 500 million dollars is included for such programs as housing and slum clearance, expanded social security and the national health program. In addition, there will be an increase in receipts and expenditures of trust accounts under my recommendation for strengthening the contributory social insurance system.

The plans of each Government agency have been thoroughly reviewed, and the amounts shown in the budget represent, in my judgment, the minimum requirements for the next fiscal year. I believe that this budget reflects the necessities of our national policy and the desires of our people and that an extensive review by the Congress will result in its acceptance as a sound program of governmental action.

Budget totals

[Fiscal years. In millions]

| | 1948 actual | 1949 estimated | 1950 estimated |
|---|---|---|---|
| Receipts | $42,211 | $39,580 | $40,985 |
| Expenditures | 33,791 | 40,180 | 41,858 |
| Surplus (+) or deficit (−) | +8,419 | −600 | −873 |

NOTE.—Estimated expenditures are based on existing and proposed legislation. Estimated receipts exclude new tax proposals. Throughout this Budget, payments of refunds of Government receipts are reported as deductions from total receipts; in the past, they have been reported as expenditures.

The 1950 budget, like all those since the end of the war, is dominated by our international and national-defense programs. Together, they are expected to amount to 21 billion dollars, or half of all budget expenditures.

International affairs and finance account for 6.7 billion dollars of expenditures in the fiscal year 1950, compared with 7.2 billion dollars in 1949. Most of these funds will be spent as part of the strong economic support we are extending to the free nations of western Europe, whose recovery is the key to continued independence and to safeguarding freedom in many other parts of the world. Our investment in European recovery will repay us many times in terms of increased strength and improved organization for peace.

But in existing circumstances, economic strength is not enough to assure continued independence to free peoples. Under the Charter of the United Nations, therefore, we have been discussing with some of the western European countries measures designed to increase the security of the North Atlantic area. To further this objective, I expect later to request funds for providing military supplies to those countries and to certain other countries where the provision of such assistance is important to our national security. It is not possible now to predict accurately what will be needed, and I have therefore included no allowance in the budget. The fact that additional funds will be required to meet the demands of this program emphasizes even more strongly the need for increased revenues in the years ahead.

While we believe that active participation in the work of the United Nations and support for the economic recovery and growing strength of free nations are the most important steps we can take toward peace, we must also maintain adequate national-defense forces. In this budget, expenditures for national defense are estimated to total 14.3 billion dollars in 1950, compared to 11.8 billion dollars for 1949. New authorizations recommended for national defense in 1950 total 15.9 billion dollars. Defense expenditures to maintain the present program are expected to be higher in 1951, as a result of expanding programs now under way and the large orders already placed for aircraft, ships, and other material and equipment, which will be delivered and paid for in the next few years.

The military forces recommended in this budget are the most powerful this Nation has ever maintained in peacetime. The principal objective we should have in mind in planning for our national defense at this time is to build a foundation of military strength which can be sustained for a period of years without excessive strain on our productive resources, and which will permit rapid expansion should the need arise. The recommendations in this budget move toward this objective. I believe that they will permit this Nation to maintain a proper military preparedness in the present uncertain period.

Two other commitments of the Government will continue to have a major impact on budget expenditures in the fiscal year 1950. These are interest on the public debt and our program of services and benefits provided for veterans and their dependents. Together they total 11 billion dollars, or 26 percent of the budget.

A general decline in the number of veterans drawing readjustment benefits reduces expenditures for veterans to 5.5 billion dollars, 1.3 billion dollars below the current year. Interest on the public debt, however, shows an increase from 5.3 billion dollars in 1949 to more than 5.4 billion dollars in 1950.

Expenditures for all activities of the Federal Government, exclusive of those required for the four items—international, national defense, veterans, and interest on the public debt—total 10 billion dollars or 24 percent of the budget.

Programs devoted to social welfare, health, and security require expenditures of 2.4 billion dollars. Of this amount nearly half is in direct grants to States for public assistance.

Development of our natural resources, including atomic energy, is estimated to cost 1.9 billion dollars. Programs devoted to agriculture and agricultural resources require expenditures of 1.7 billion dollars. Provision for transportation and communication facilities and services, many of them supporting our national defense activities, requires 1.6 billion dollars.

All other activities of Government—for housing, education, labor, finance, commerce, and industry and the costs of general government—amount to 2.3 billion dollars, or 5 percent of the total budget.

Expenditures of 6.4 billion dollars are included within the foregoing budget totals for new legislation. Of this amount, 5.6 billion dollars is directly concerned with international and national defense activities, while the remainder provides for domestic needs.

There are many activities of Government, authorized at various periods, which impose continuing financial obligations and tend to represent fixed elements in the budget. A careful review has been made of these programs to assure that they meet only the most essential needs in the light of present conditions. As a result, cut-backs have been recommended in the veterans' hospital construction program, recommendations for new public works have been included only where it is not in the public interest to postpone them, as in the case of some power projects, and an increase in postal rates has been recommended to lower the postal deficit. Similar changes are reflected in other areas.

In addition, a great deal of effort has been devoted to achieving the economies which should be obtained through more effective organization and conduct of Government operations. There is no easy way of attaining this type of economy, but the size and complexity of our governmental activities require that we devote continuing attention to improving the management of the public business. Further, we must make it possible for responsible Federal executives to take the actions which will lead to increased efficiency, economy, and closer coordination of activities.

To make more rapid progress toward this goal, to which I am firmly committed, this budget includes a request for a management improvement fund of $1,000,000 to be appropriated to the President and utilized by him to carry on necessary and worth-while management improvement activities. The budget also reflects certain anticipated savings which should result from management improvement activities now under way.

To strengthen further the management of the Government, I am recommending the immediate enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of the heads and assistant heads of the departments and agencies. The budget includes a tentative estimate of the funds needed to provide these increases. I also recommend that the Classification Act be revised to permit the payment of more realistic salaries to career employees and to correct the dislocations and inequities created in recent years. The Government and its employees should be assured that the salaries paid for positions at all levels are fair compensation for the work performed.

Fiscal prudence requires that we consider the Government's program, not on the basis of a single year alone but in the light of the continuing national policies already adopted. It must be recognized that expenditures in the fiscal year 1951 are likely to be larger than those for 1950. Expenditures for national defense can be expected to rise substantially above the level estimated for 1950. We cannot expect any material decline in our international responsibilities. We must face squarely the fact that we foresee a deficit in the fiscal year 1950 under existing tax laws, even without any allowance for new military aid, and that even higher expenditures will probably be required in future years.

Furthermore, in the fiscal year 1950, the present large excess of receipts of trust accounts, with its anti-inflationary effects, will be sharply reduced by the scheduled payment to veterans of a dividend of about 2 billion dollars from the national service life insurance fund.

Finally, it must be apparent that in times like the present we must be in a position to make new plans if conditions change. I do not consider it prudent under such circumstances for the Government finances to be in unbalance, or even in precarious balance. In prosperous times like the present, we should take the necessary steps to reduce the public debt and place the Government finances on a sounder footing.

Therefore, I am recommending that the Congress enact new revenue legislation.

It is not an easy step for me to take to recommend new taxes. I do so with a double conviction, first, that under present circumstances a prosperous country cannot afford an unbalanced budget; and second, that after thorough review of the cost of each Government program my recommendations represent a level below which our responsibilities will not permit us to go in the next fiscal year.

The budget of the United States Government is large because its responsibilities are large. The budget reflects the realities of our international position and our concern for a strong and progressive domestic economy. This Nation is today the strongest bulwark of freedom in the world. The decisions we make concerning our national finances must be based on a sober understanding of this fact.

Budget Receipts

On the basis of existing tax legislation, budget receipts for the fiscal year 1950 are expected to total $41,000,000,000, an increase of more than a billion dollars over receipts in the current fiscal year. The estimates assume the continuance of full employment and approximately the current levels of economic activity.

Income taxes: Income taxes on individuals and corporations are the major source of revenue of the Federal Government. Receipts from these taxes represent over two-thirds of budget receipts at present.

The Revenue Act of 1948, passed over my veto, is causing a sharp reduction of individual income-tax collections in the fiscal year 1949. Even though the continuation of the present high level of personal income is assumed, these receipts in the fiscal year 1950 will remain below the corresponding receipts in the fiscal year 1948.

Receipts from taxes on corporations are expected to increase substantially in the fiscal years 1949 and 1950. With the end of the war, the rates of these taxes were reduced and collections declined sharply from the high levels of the war years, but the general prosperity that followed the reconversion period has brought steadily rising profits and higher tax yields.

Excises and miscellaneous receipts: Excise taxes and miscellaneous receipts are the other major sources of Federal revenue. Excise taxes are expected to continue the gradual upward trend of recent years, reflecting the continued high level of business activity. Miscellaneous receipts have been declining from the peak reached in the fiscal year 1947. The disposal of war surplus is nearing completion, and consequently by the fiscal year 1950 miscellaneous receipts will be approaching a more stable level.

Budget receipts (including proposed changes in employment taxes and miscellaneous receipts)

| Appropriation to trust funds: | | | |

| Proposed legislation: | | | |
| Health insurance | | | 260 |
| Expanded coverage, old-age and survivors insurance | | | 1,700 |
| Refunds of receipts | 2,272 | 2,709 | 2,097 |
| Budget receipts | 42,211 | 39,580 | 40,985 |

NOTE.—Payments of refunds of Government receipts are now reported as deductions from total receipts; previously, they were reported as expenditures. Overpayments by taxpayers are not true receipts of the Government nor are they, when refunded, properly chargeable as operating costs of the Government. Payments by wholly owned Government corporations and enterprises for retirement of capital stock and surplus, which were formerly reported as miscellaneous receipts, are also excluded from both receipts and expenditures, since they do not represent operating costs or true receipts of the Government. These improvements in reporting practice result in reducing budget receipts and expenditures for each year by equal amounts, and therefore have no effect upon the amount of surplus or deficit.

Employment taxes: The continuation of full employment brings gradually rising revenues from employment taxes. Furthermore, under existing legislation, the tax rate for railroad retirement increases in January 1949 and that for old-age and survivors insurance in January 1950. I recommend that the rate increase for the latter tax be moved forward to July 1949.

I have recommended programs of health and disability insurance and expansion of coverage for the social insurance programs now in operation. These measures would result at the outset in added collections of employment taxes greater than the added payments for benefits, but the funds would be transferred to trust accounts and would not appreciably affect budget receipts.

Refunds: This budget reflects the recent change in Federal financial reporting, under which refunds of receipts are shown as deductions from receipts, rather than as expenditures. These refunds are not true operating costs of the Government but are for the return of overpayments of taxes and duties. Such refunds are exceptionally high in the fiscal year 1949, because of the unusual "overwithholding" of individual income taxes for January through April 1948, resulting from the lower rates set retroactively by the Revenue Act of 1948. Interest paid on refunds continues to be shown as an expenditure.

RETIREMENT OF THE PUBLIC DEBT

The change in the budget outlook in the last 12 months has meant a corresponding change in the rate of reduction of the public debt. Instead of the budget surplus of nearly 5 billion dollars estimated last January for the fiscal year 1949, we now face a deficit of 600 million dollars. Accordingly, there will be no net reduction in the debt during fiscal year 1949, other than that made possible by a small reduction in the Treasury's cash balance during the year. The debt on June 30, 1949, is estimated to be 251.6 billion dollars.

The major reason for the failure to achieve any sizable debt reduction in 1949 is the tax reduction enacted by the Eightieth Congress. The increase in taxes which I am recommending should permit us to make, in 1950, the minimum reduction consistent with responsible fiscal policy in prosperous times such as these.

BUDGET EXPENDITURES AND AUTHORIZATIONS

The complex budget of the Government can best be summarized in terms of major functions. These major functions—national defense, international affairs and finance, veterans' services and benefits, and so forth—set forth the broad purposes for which the Government spends money, regardless of which department or agency carries them out. Estimated expenditures for the fiscal year 1950 of 41.9 billion dollars include all expenditures from the general and special accounts of the Treasury, as well as the net expenditures of Government corporations and enterprises. They exclude expenditures made from trust accounts.

The full impact and direction of the Government's program cannot be measured in terms of expenditures alone in any one year. Many of the commitments made under the appropriations and other authorizations enacted by the Congress for any year do not result in expenditures until a later year. For example, of the estimated 1950 expenditures, 34 billion dollars will be made from new appropriations and authorizations recommended in this budget, and 7.9 billion dollars will be made from those enacted in prior years.

In order to give a comprehensive picture of the financial requirements of Government programs, my budget message sets forth the net new appropriations and other authorizations requested. "Net new appropriations," totaling 38.5 billion dollars for fiscal year 1950, represent total appropriations requested—including permanent appropriations—less those to be used to liquidate prior year contract authorizations. "Other authorizations," totaling 6 billion dollars for fiscal year 1950, include contract authorizations which permit the placement of specific contracts but require later appropriations to liquidate these contracts, and special authorizations to use the proceeds of Treasury borrowing to finance certain types of Government programs. Together, "net new appropriations" and "other authorizations," totaling 44.6 billion dollars represent the new obligational authority recommended for carrying on the Government's business.

SPECIFIC PROGRAMS

The following sections describe in broad outline the Government programs in each of the major functional areas and the principal changes proposed in this budget.

International affairs and finance

Two world wars and the years between have convinced the people of the United States that their security and well-being depend on conditions of peace and stability in the world. The complexity of the international postwar recovery problem and the tensions which make the transition to peace more difficult have deepened this conviction.

The fundamental objective of United States foreign policy is to achieve world peace and international security resting on the strength, mutual interests, and cooperation of free nations. The budget reflects this policy in the funds provided for our participation in the United Nations and for the regular operations of the State Department and other agencies. But the instruments of our policy requiring the largest measure of budgetary support are the extraordinary programs of economic and military aid to those nations and peoples who share our international objectives and our determination to make them effective. Through all these means, we are acting to strengthen the great moral force of freedom on which we believe the advancement of people everywhere depends.

Total expenditures for international activities, exclusive of possible expenditures for a new program of providing military supplies to certain countries, are expected to be 6.7 billion dollars in the fiscal year 1950—a drop from the 7.2 billion dollars estimated for the fiscal year 1949. Expenditures for economic assistance may be expected to decline in subsequent years with continued progress toward world economic recovery. But any forward estimate of our international expenditures must be highly tentative in view of the present uncertain world situation.

Reconstruction and military aid: Our aid to European recovery is the major program of economic assistance in which we are now engaged. Begun in April 1948, this program is expected to result in 4.6 billion dollars of expenditures in the present fiscal year, and 4.5 billion dollars in the fiscal year 1950—nearly 70 percent of our 1950 expenditures for international activities.

[1] In addition, this budget includes 3,036 million dollars of appropriations recommended to liquidate prior year contract authorizations.

United States aid to western European countries and the mutual self-help which it has stimulated among them are already resulting in substantial progress toward economic recovery and political stability. The volume of production—both agricultural and industrial—is increasing as the months go by. This momentum must be maintained if the European economy is to become independent of extraordinary outside assistance by the target date of July 1952. To meet this objective, it is also extremely important for this Nation to undertake through such means as an extended and less restrictive reciprocal trade act, those adjustments in our foreign-trade pattern which will help to bring about a higher level and a better balance of world trade.

Further authorizing legislation by the Congress will be necessary before the end of the current fiscal year in order to carry the European recovery program forward without interruption. By the end of December, authorizations issued to the European countries for procurement had nearly reached the limit set by the presently available Economic Cooperation Administration funds. The bulk of the commodities involved will be shipped by the end of March. This budget accordingly anticipates a supplemental appropriation request for 1,250 million dollars for the remainder of the current fiscal year, in addition to the 4.3-billion-dollar appropriation requested for the fiscal year 1950.

I recommend that, in extending the Economic Cooperation Act, the Congress eliminate the present legal requirement which in effect charges 3 billion dollars of the fiscal year 1949 expenditures for European aid against the fiscal year 1948 surplus. This wholly artificial bookkeeping shift in no way affects the Government's actual financial operations, but it does result in a distorted picture of the budget surplus or deficit in these 2 years.

I have already referred to the prospective North Atlantic arrangements, now under discussion. In addition, we are considering furnishing military supplies to certain countries in furtherance of our national security. As with the European recovery program, military aid will call for a large measure of mutual aid and self-help among the participating countries. Because of present uncertainty as to cost and timing, no amounts are included for this program in the budget.

The scope and magnitude of several of our other current assistance programs cannot be accurately foreseen at this time. These now include aid to Greece, Turkey, China, and Korea. Funds are provided for assistance programs of this character in the budget under "other proposed aid legislation," with appropriations tentatively estimated at 600 million dollars and expenditures at 355 million dollars for the fiscal year 1950. I shall recommend specific legislation and appropriations to the Congress at a later date.

The Export-Import Bank will continue to make loans in fiscal year 1950 for promoting international trade and economic development, particularly in Latin America. Net expenditures of the bank in the fiscal year 1950 are expected to be relatively low because of rising collections on earlier loans and because our aid to Europe is now financed almost entirely from ECA funds. Mainly because of a large Canadian repayment, the bank is expected to show no net expenditures in the current fiscal year.

Foreign relief: Our principal foreign relief activities at the present time are those under the Army's program of government and relief in occupied areas—primarily Germany and Japan. Tentative estimates of about 1 billion dollars of appropriations and expenditures for fiscal year 1950 are included in this budget—a substantial decline from 1949. These estimates include funds to continue the rehabilitation program now under way in Japan. With these additional sums for rehabilitation and with further ECA recovery aid for Germany in the next fiscal year, progress toward economic recovery in the occupied areas should continue, with a resulting further decline in expenditures in subsequent years.

Foreign relations: The principal change contemplated in the program of the Department of State is the planned expansion of information and education activities. Expenditures for Foreign Service buildings are expected to decline, so that total expenditures for foreign relations activities are expected to be about the same in the fiscal year 1950 as in 1949. As part of our general program for improved Federal administration, provision is made for increased flexibility in management for the Secretary of State through the consolidation of appropriations. Amounts are included in this budget to cover the cost of proposed legislation granting Foreign Service personnel pay raises similar to those given most employees under the Federal Employees Salary Act of 1948.

I am requesting legislation authorizing the payment of 17 million dollars in the fiscal year 1949 for payment of war-damage claims of neutral European countries.

Philippine aid: Our assistance to the Philippine Republic in its recovery from war devastation is now at a peak level. Total expenditures for rehabilitation and for payment of war-damage claims are expected to decline slightly in the fiscal year 1950 and to fall much more sharply in the fiscal year 1951. In our veterans' program we are continuing to give compensation to disabled Philippine veterans who fought in our joint efforts against the Japanese. Provision for financing veterans' hospitals and medical services, authorized by recent legislation, are included in the reserve for contingencies, pending the development with the Philippine Republic of detailed plans for carrying out this program.

International organizations: Our contribution to the International Refugee Organization is estimated at 70 million dollars in the fiscal year 1950, approximately the same as in 1949. With the expected migration of refugees to the United States and other areas, the IRO program should be substantially completed by June 30, 1950. It is my hope that the present Displaced Persons Act will be speedily stripped of its restrictive and discriminatory provisions in order that we may make a contribution to this program more worthy of our best traditions. A tentative estimate of 16 million dollars for the fiscal year 1949 is also included in this budget for our contribution to the United Nations program of relief for Arab and other refugees from Palestine.

Outlays for our participation in other international organizations, including the United Nations, will continue in the fiscal year 1950 at about the same level as in 1949. A 1949 supplemental appropriation of 65 million dollars is included for the loan for the United Nations' headquarters construction. Tentative estimates are included in 1950 for a loan to the Food and Agriculture Organization for construction of a headquarters building, and for our contribution to the International Trade Organization.

National defense

In my budget message for the fiscal year 1949 I indicated that in spite of the reduction of our armed services to a small fraction of their wartime strength, national defense still remained the largest single Government program. I further indicated that the funds recommended, about 11 billion dollars, provided for only the minimum national defense requirements.

Before the Congress could complete action on that budget, the uncertainty of world conditions made it necessary to consider steps to develop additional military strength which would give evidence of continuing firmness in world affairs. Therefore, in an address to the Congress on March 17, 1948, I recommended the prompt enactment of universal training legislation and the temporary enactment of selective-service legislation. Shortly thereafter, I recommended additional authorizations for national defense, bringing my total recommendations for fiscal year 1949 to more than 14.7 billion dollars.

Since then I have given continued study to our national security requirements for the present and the future. For the time being it is essential to continue the selective service process. However, this is not the solution to the Nation's long-range military manpower and training problem. Permanent legislation providing for universal training is essential if we are to achieve an acceptable degree of national security.

My budget recommendations for national defense in the fiscal year 1950 are based on a plan for a national defense positio of relative military readiness, coupled with a higher degree of mobilization preparedness. This type of military planning will permit us continuously to revise our tactics and develop our weapons to meet modern conditions, but is clearly consistent with our traditional concept of military strength for purposes of defense.

In arriving at my recommendations, I have had the benefit of the considered advice of civilian and military leaders best qualified to evaluate the international, strategic, and economic aspects of our national defense requirements. I believe that these recommendations reflect a proper relationship between our security requirements and our economic and financial resources, and envision an Army, Navy, and Air Force in a condition of relative readiness, all functioning as an integrated team. Moreover, I am convinced that we should plan our military structure at this time so as to insure a balanced military program in the foreseeable future at approximately the level recommended in this budget.

At the same time we must recognize that preparations for defense must be flexible, and not rigid. They must reflect changes in the international situation, changes in technology and in the economic situation. We must be in a position to alter our military programs as circumstances change.

The National Security Act of 1947 established an organizational framework better than we have ever had before and provided for a more flexible control and adjustment of our military program. The establishment of a Weapons Evaluation Board under the Secretary of Defense is an example of the type of development we are continuously making to achieve the best possible assignment of weapons and tasks among the military services. However, we have had enough experience under that act to recognize that further improvements need to be made which cannot be accomplished under existing law. Therefore, I expect to recommend certain changes in the National Security Act which will help to assure readjustments of our defense program as a whole and in all its parts as security requirements change.

The recommendations for the National Military Establishment for the fiscal year 1950 mark a beginning toward a national defense program in which our air, naval, and land forces plan and operate as a team under a unified strategic concept. The 1950 program gives priority to air power and to strengthening the civilian Reserve components, and continues to emphasize research and development and industrial mobilization. The budget provides for maintaining the necessary occupation forces in the former enemy areas for which satisfactory international settlements have not yet been worked out. The budget also provides substantial amounts to continue the matériel improvement programs for which large authorizations were enacted under the augmented fiscal year 1949 budget. Continuing expenditures will be necessary for an orderly replacement program in future years as existing inventories are used up and as matériel wears out or becomes obsolete.

Expenditures by the National Military Establishment for defense purposes in the fiscal year 1950 are expected to amount to somewhat over 13.1 billion dollars, including a tentative estimate of 385 million dollars for programs for which new authorizing legislation will later be requested. The stock piling of strategic materials and other activities supporting defense are expected to require additional expenditures of about 530 million dollars. Furthermore, a tentative estimate of 600 million dollars has been added for the first year cost of universal training—when in full operation this program may require expenditures of 2 billion dollars annually. In total, the national defense budget I am recommending will require estimated expenditures of slightly less than 14.3 billion dollars in the fiscal year 1950, an increase of 2.5 billion dollars over the 1949 level. Somewhat higher expenditures are likely in subsequent years.

[1] In addition, the budget includes 2,061 million dollars of appropriations recommended to liquidate prior contract authorizations and 75 million dollars to cover other prior year obligations.

[2] In addition, 279 million dollars is being made immediately available in the fiscal year 1949 to cover increased cost of completing authorized naval ship construction program.

Net new appropriations and other authorizations specifically recommended in this budget for the National Military Establishment in the fiscal year 1950 are 13.7 billion dollars. This total, however, includes an upward adjustment of 279 million dollars for increased cost of the naval ship construction programs authorized in 1949 and prior years. In addition, 830 million dollars is provided as a tentative estimate for additional public works, for military pay adjustments, and for other special programs, dependent upon the passage of necessary enabling legislation. In all, 14.5 billion dollars of new obligational authority is provided for the National Military Establishment for use in the fiscal year 1950, an increase of 700 million dollars over amounts enacted for the fiscal year 1949.

Of the 13.7 billion dollars of specific recommendations for new obligational authority for the National Military Establishment, 11 million dollars is requested for the Office of the Secretary of Defense, 4.6 billion dollars for the Air Force, 4.5 billion dollars for the Army, and 4.6 billion dollars for the Navy, counting the upward adjustment for ship construction costs mentioned above.

In addition to the new obligational authority for the National Military Establishment, this budget includes 525 million dollars of new authority for procurement of critical and strategic materials, 36 million dollars for other defense-supporting activities, and a tentative appropriation estimate of 800 million dollars for the inauguration of universal training.

In all, new obligational authority for national defense programs of nearly 15.9 billion dollars is included in this budget. This compares with 14.7 billion dollars for the fiscal year 1949, including 2.9 billion dollars made available in 1948, and also including tentative supplemental authorizations of 341 million dollars chiefly for stock piling.

Of the 15.9 billion dollars, 13.2 billion dollars is requested in the form of appropriations and 2.7 billion dollars in contract authorizations. In addition, appropriations of 2.1 billion dollars are requested to liquidate prior year contract authorizations.

Military strength—summary: The requirements of the various services have been determined, not separately, but in relation to our total security position and the degree of military readiness which is planned. The basic concept upon which my recommendations are based is that this Nation's military security should rest on a nucleus of highly trained and mobile forces—Army, Navy, and Air—backed by ready reserves of trained men, stand-by equipment and productive facilities, and an integrated mobilization plan which relates our national security requirements to the tremendous productive capacity of American industry. Taken as a whole, the amounts recommended in this budget will permit the maintenance and operation in the fiscal year 1950 of the augmented defense forces now reached under the increased 1949 budget program.

Under this budget, the Air Force in fiscal year 1950 will continue at about the present strength of 412,000 officers and men on active duty. It is contemplated that the Air Force will be organized with a minimum of about 48 combat groups and 10 squadrons, together with 27 groups of the Air National Guard. Within the limit of the funds provided, it is possible that adjustments in unit structure or strategic planning may at any time require changes in the number of active groups. At the end of fiscal year 1950, the Air Force program contemplates an active inventory of 9,200 aircraft of all types from trainers to heavy bombers. Increased funds in the budget will permit the build-up of supporting forces in the Air National Guard to an average of 45,000 personnel and in the Air Force Reserve to 68,000 personnel in regular training status.

| Total | 1,394 | 1,604 | 1,616 | 655 | 949 | 1,950 | 2,100 |

NOTE.—The recommended strengths for all the services include 18-year-old 1-year enlistees and other personnel in training but exclude cadets and midshipmen at the Military and Naval Academies.

Personnel in the Army will be continued at 677,000 officers and men in order to maintain 10 divisions at increased strengths, together with 59 battalions. The active Army will be backed by the National Guard with an average strength of 325,000 personnel, an Organized Reserve of 230,000 in regular training status, as well as by other reserve personnel and equipment. Continuing responsibilities in the occupation of Germany, Austria, and Japan and in manning outlying bases will engage about 40 percent of the Army strength overseas in fiscal year 1950.

In the naval and marine forces a strength of 527,000 officers and men throughout the fiscal year 1950 is provided. The size of the active naval fleet is planned to be 731 ships, including 238 combatant ships. Its composition will be changed somewhat from the present fleet to accord with assigned functions and presently foreseen defense requirements. The active inventory of Regular Navy and Marine Corps aircraft is expected to be 7,450 in the fiscal year 1950.

Under the reserve programs of the Navy and Marine Corps, 281,000 officers and men will be trained in 1950. Stand-by ships and matériel to augment the active Navy will remain available if needed.

Although present recruiting rates indicate that only small inductions, if any, will be necessary under selective service, it is essential that such authority remain available in the event that voluntary enlistments drop. Moreover, it must be recognized that the existence of the Selective Service Act has in itself been a contributing factor to the current results of the recruiting program of the services.

Pay and maintenance of military personnel: The pay and maintenance for the average of 1,616,000 officers and men on active duty in the fiscal year 1950 will require estimated expenditures of 5 billion dollars, 38 percent of all defense expenditures by the National Military Establishment. Expenditures for pay, allowances, subsistence, travel, welfare, training, clothing, and medical care will average about 3,100 dollars per man in the fiscal year 1950.

The increases in rates of military pay and allowances in 1942 and 1946 did not provide a balanced pay structure for the military services. A general overhauling of the military pay, allowance, and benefit structure is overdue. Since it is desirable for remuneration of military personnel to be in line with salaries of Federal civilian employees and other comparable groups, a tentative amount for this adjustment has been included in the budget, pending later legislative recommendations.

Civilian components: Our concept of national defense places important reliance upon the readiness of citizen-soldiers. This budget provides for larger and better-trained reserves for the Air Force, Army, and Navy. Expenditures for civilian components in the fiscal year 1950, exclusive of amounts for construction of facilities, are estimated at 760 million dollars, 30 percent above outlays in the present year and more than twice the amount spent last year. These expenditures cover drill and training pay and maintenance of reservists, operating expenses, and procurement of equipment over and above amounts transferred from wartime stocks.

The budget recommendations of 795 million dollars of obligational authority for the fiscal year 1950 contemplate expansion of the reserve programs in 1950 and in later years toward the objectives outlined in my recent Executive order. Such expansion is planned at as rapid a rate as is consistent with sound organization, economical operation, and effective integration with the regular forces. The funds recommended for 1950 will permit an average of 949,000 officers and men in regular training status in air, naval, and ground units, as compared to 655,000 now participating.

Research and development: Scientific and technical advances are vital to a dynamic national defense program. To develop improved weapons and equipment and add to our basic knowledge, new appropriations of 534 million dollars are recommended for direct costs of research and development for the fiscal year 1950. This amount does not include substantial outlays for indirect costs such as the pay and maintenance of military personnel engaged in research and development activities, and the construction and maintenance of facilities.

Direct expenditures for research and development in the fiscal year 1950 are estimated at 505 million dollars. This is somewhat below the estimate for the fiscal year 1949, when payments for programs initiated at the end of the war will be completed. About one-half of the expenditures for research and development will be for aeronautical research and development.

Aircraft and related procurement: For the fiscal year 1949, 2.8 billion dollars of new obligational authority was provided for aircraft and related procurement, of which 2 billion dollars for the Air Force was made available for obligation until the end of 1950 and included some amounts for nonrecurring expenses.

It is estimated that 3.2 billion dollars in unexpended authorizations from 1949 and prior years will be carried forward to the fiscal year 1950. New obligational authority of 2.3 billion dollars is recommended for the fiscal year 1950 to permit contracts for approximately 34 million airframe pounds. This will make a total of 5.5 billion dollars in aircraft and related equipment to be delivered and paid for in 1950 and subsequent years.

Expenditures for aircraft and related procurement in the fiscal year 1950 are estimated at 1.7 billion dollars, about 500 million dollars more than in the present year. Deliveries of 37 million airframe pounds are now scheduled for fiscal year 1950 and are expected to be slightly higher in fiscal year 1951.

Aircraft from wartime reserves will continue to meet a part of the replacement requirements in fiscal year 1950. In subsequent years, when these reserves are depleted, an increase in aircraft procurement may be required if the strength and structure of the Air Force and naval aviation are to be maintained at the level and replacement rates contemplated in this budget.

Naval ship construction: Expenditures for naval ship construction in fiscal year 1950 are estimated to be 406 million dollars, an increase of about 100 million dollars over the estimate for 1949.

Including the construction in fiscal year 1949, more than 1 billion dollars of naval ship construction, under present authorizations, will remain to be completed in fiscal year 1950 and later years. I am including in the budget 279 million dollars to cover increased costs of completing the present construction program, with some readjustment in types of ships to be built. In addition, I am requesting 52 million dollars of new authorizations for certain ships which will be substituted for some of those previously authorized.

Military public works construction: Expenditures for military public works construction by the Air Force, Army, and Navy in the fiscal year 1950, under existing legislation, are estimated at about the current level of 300 million dollars. This construction is largely for research and development facilities and badly needed housing for troops and dependents, both in the United States and overseas. This budget recommends new obligational authority for the fiscal year 1950 of 113 million dollars for projects for which legislative authorization exists.

There are, however, additional requirements for family housing, for research and development facilities, and for other military construction which are not yet authorized. A tentative estimate for these additional military public works is included in the budget, pending the enactment of authorizing legislation.

All other military expenditures: The remaining expenditures of the National Military Establishment in fiscal year 1950, are estimated at 3.9 billion dollars compared with 3.4 billion dollars in 1949. These expenditures cover the procurement of other matériel (in addition to aircraft and ships), supplies, and services. The largest part of these expenditures will be for civilian workers engaged in production, maintenance, and administrative activities, both overseas and in the United States. Of all Federal civilian employees, approximately 865,000, or about 40 percent, will be employed in defense activities by the National Military Establishment.

Expenditures for procurement of equipment (exclusive of aircraft and ships), particularly for the Army, will increase in the fiscal year 1950 as deliveries on 1949 contracts are made, even though new obligations for this purpose in 1950 will be lower. Expenses of maintaining and operating facilities and equipment including aircraft will also increase over the 1949 level, largely in the Army and Air Force.

Increased emphasis has been given to industrial mobilization preparedness in the budget for the National Military Establishment with the recommendation of appropriations of approximately 129 million dollars for fiscal year 1950 as contrasted with 57 million dollars provided for 1949. In addition to making provisions for the continued maintenance of tools and industrial plants held in stand-by status, the programs for industrial mobilization planning with industry and within the military establishments are being increased. Added emphasis is being given to coordinating the cataloging of supply items among the military services, and a greater integration of current procurement with industrial mobilization plans.

Stock piling and other defense activities: The aim of the stock piling program is to provide a basic reserve of materials in which accessible resources are deficient, thereby permitting a rapid and sustained economic mobilization in the event of emergency. Stock-pile procurement continues to be hampered by materials shortages and rising prices, since it must meet the competition of current industrial consumption, including that for military purposes. However, the concentration of procurement on the more urgently required materials should permit us to make substantial progress toward our goal of a reasonably adequate stock pile with minimum effect on current consumption.

Toward the stock-pile goal, this budget recommends 525 million dollars of new obligational authority for the fiscal year 1950 and supplemental authorizations of 310 million dollars for the present fiscal year. Of these amounts 211 million dollars for 1950 and 270 million dollars for 1949 are in contract authorizations to be used primarily for developmental contracts. A total of 800 million dollars in obligational authority has already been enacted in the last 3 years. In addition, by the end of fiscal year 1950, materials valued at about 700 million dollars will have been transferred to the stock pile from war surplus inventories and from Economic Cooperation Administration operations. Of the total stock-pile objective of 3.7 billion dollars, materials and authorizations amounting to 2.3 billion dollars will have been provided.

Deliveries and expenditures, of course, will lag behind authorizations. Expenditures in the fiscal year 1950 are estimated at 525 million dollars, an increase of 175 million dollars in outlays over the current year. By the end of the fiscal year 1950, materials valued at about 1.6 billion dollars are expected to be on hand.

The stock pile represents an addition to the supplies obtainable in an emergency from domestic production and imports from protected sources. The recommended authorizations will permit the stock pile to be built up to the point at which, with the aid of prompt and effective allocations, a comparatively high degree of protection will be afforded to our economy in the event of emergency.

Expenditures for all other defense programs, including expenses of the Selective Service System, maintenance of reserve industrial plants by the Federal Works Agency, and by other agencies, are estimated at 46 million dollars in the fiscal year 1950. On the other hand, net receipts of 39 million dollars are estimated in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation defense program.

Veterans' services and benefits

As a nation, we have sought to give our veterans opportunities to work, to earn, and to recapture the normal pattern of their lives. In addition to our general programs for full employment, increased health services, improved housing, and greater security for all, we have provided an extensive program of special benefits and services to veterans and their dependents.

The extent and scope of constructive measures to assist veterans of our earlier wars to return to useful civilian life were limited. Too often prior to World War I our country belatedly attempted to discharge its obligation to veterans merely by bestowing upon them pensions and gratuities. In contrast, servicemen of World Wars I and II have received more timely and better treatment both in the service and out. Improved medical and hospital care, insurance benefits, vocational rehabilitation, compensation, and other benefits have been provided to disabled servicemen or to the dependents of the deceased. Servicemen of World War I received adjusted compensation, while World War II veterans are receiving readjustment benefits to assist them in obtaining education, training, jobs, businesses, and homes.

At the present time our expenditures for veterans' programs are declining as readjustment benefits for World War II servicemen fall off. However, the long-run trend of compensation and pension costs and of hospital and medical care is gradually upward. This means that over-all expenditures under present legislation will remain high even after the completion of the temporary programs under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act.

The program of veterans' services and benefits should reflect the fundamental fact that our primary long-run obligation is to dependents of veterans deceased from service causes and to veterans disabled in the service. In the fulfillment of these obligations we have two basic purposes. The first is to alleviate financial hardship to dependents of veterans deceased from service causes. The second is to help veterans surmount the physical and economic handicaps of their service disabilities. At the same time, we should preserve and stress our basic objective of assisting the recipients of these benefits to be as nearly as possible self-reliant and self-sustaining members of our society.

The necessity for new or extended benefits for veterans without service disabilities should be judged, not solely from the standpoint of service in our armed forces, but in the light of existing social welfare programs available to all, veterans and nonveterans alike. In recent years social-security protection, including unemployment and old-age and survivors' insurance and old-age assistance, has been made available to a large percentage of our general population. Prior to World War I the lack of such general benefits was, of course, one of the main reasons for the enactment of special benefits to veterans. At the present time we seek to broaden and extend these social-security programs and to enact a comprehensive national health and disability insurance program for all our people, including veterans, who with their immediate families will soon constitute 40 percent of the population.

Total expenditures for veterans' benefits and services are expected to be 5.5 billion dollars in the fiscal year 1950, about 1.3 billion dollars below estimates for the current fiscal year. This drop reflects the virtual completion of unemployment and self-employment allowances, an expected sharp decline in educational training programs, and the inclusion in the fiscal year 1949 of a nonrecurrent payment to insurance trust funds. Even at the expected lower level, expenditures for veterans' programs will still comprise more than one-eighth of the total budget.

Readjustment benefits: The readjustment program has provided valuable educational and other opportunities to veterans of World War II. It is estimated that by the end of the fiscal year 1950, 6,000,000 veterans will have used education and training benefits, more than 9,000,000 will have received unemployment and self-employment allowances, and nearly 2,000,000 will have obtained loan guaranties for homes and businesses. By the end of the fiscal year 1950 total outlays under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act since 1945 will have exceeded 13 billion dollars.

Enrollment in school, job, and farm-training courses is estimated to decline to 1,575,000 in 1950 from this year's average enrollment of 2,000,000. In 1950 more than two-thirds of the participants in this program will be in on-the-job, on-farm, and below-college-level training, while less than one-third will be in colleges and universities. Total expenditures, estimated at approximately 2 billion dollars in the fiscal year 1950, reflect the increased rates of subsistence allowances enacted in the last session of the Congress.

I am recommending reenactment in its present form of the provision of the 1949 appropriation act prohibiting the use of funds for avocational and recreational training. This constructive action on the part of Congress in eliminating expenditures for courses which are inconsistent with the basic purpose of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act is expected to save more than 50 million dollars this year.

Under present law only a small number of veterans will be eligible for unemployment and self-employment benefits after July 25, 1949. The average number of claimants to be paid in these two programs during the fiscal year 1950 is estimated at 74,000, as compared to about 400,000 in the fiscal year 1949. Expenditures decline correspondingly to 78 million dollars. By the end of the fiscal year 1950 aggregate outlays for veterans' unemployment and self-employment benefits since 1945 will have exceeded 3.5 billion dollars.

Under the loan-guarantee title of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act, veterans obtained loans amounting to 7.4 billion dollars up to June 30, 1948, more than nine-tenths for homes, and the rest for farms and businesses. About 45 percent of this total is guaranteed or insured by the Government. Recent experience has shown a decline in the number of loans guaranteed. The estimates assume 322,000 loans in the fiscal year 1949 and 293,000 in 1950.

Pensions: It is estimated that an average of 2,968,000 individuals and families will receive compensation and pension payments in the fiscal year 1950, an increase of 52,000 over the number for the present year. About one-fourth of these payments involve non-service-connected death or disability. The 1950 expenditure estimate of 2.1 billion dollars for pensions includes 1.4 billion dollars in compensation for service-connected cases, and 500 million dollars in pensions for non-service-connected cases. It also includes 180 million dollars for subsistence allowances to service-disabled veterans in training, a decline of 70 million dollars from the present year. These expenditures reflect the increased rates of compensation enacted by the last Congress for dependents of veterans deceased or disabled from service causes.

Insurance: The Government contributes to the veterans' life insurance funds for war hazard claims. Budget expenditures for veterans' insurance, largely for such contributions, are estimated at 62 million dollars in fiscal year 1950. A tentative estimate of 413 million dollars is included for an additional contribution to the national service life insurance fund in the fiscal year 1949. This large nonrecurring item in the present year results from a re-evaluation of the Government's liability for war risk claims.

Hospital and domiciliary construction: The construction program under which the Veterans' Administration has been proceeding was planned and authorized during and immediately after the war. Now that we have the benefit of a period of postwar experience, I have reviewed the veterans' hospital and domiciliary construction program and find that to continue with the construction of the full number of 90 authorized hospitals will result in a serious overbuilding, in terms of beds needed to meet foreseeable requirements. A reduction in the program will still make it possible to provide for all service-connected patients in every geographical area and will provide an even more liberal allowance of beds for nonservice-connected patients than at present.

I have therefore directed that the program which I had previously authorized be curtailed by approximately 16,000 beds and asked the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to recommend specific adjustments in the program. I have approved his recommendations for the cancellation of 24 hospital projects, and the reduction in planned capacity of 14 additional hospitals. This will result in a reduction of 279 million dollars in the total of 1.2 billion dollars of construction previously authorized, and will reduce expenditures in the fiscal year 1950 by 115 million dollars. However, hospitals scheduled for completion will cost 42 million dollars more than originally estimated. Therefore, a net rescission of 237 million dollars in contract authorizations is recommended. Under this revised program, expenditures in the fiscal year 1950 for construction of hospital and domiciliary facilities are estimated at 260 million dollars, an increase of 77 million dollars over the fiscal year 1949, due to the progress of construction already under way.

Hospital and other services and administration: Current expenses for hospital and medical care are estimated at 574 million dollars in the fiscal year 1950, 23 million dollars less than the peak expenditure in 1949. This decline reflects largely a downturn in the out-patient medical-care program and increased use of excess supplies now in stock. Expenses of the in-patient care program will increase. The 1950 estimates provide for an average daily patient load of about 140,000, an increase of 4,000 over the current year.

Other current expenses, which are chiefly the costs of administering the nonmedical benefit programs of the Veterans' Administration, continue to decline in line with work loads.

Trust accounts: Veterans of the two World Wars hold 7,500,000 active policies under the Government life and national service life insurance programs. Premiums and earnings, supplemented by Government contributions to cover claims involving war risks, have built up substantial accumulations in these trust funds.

Assets of the national service life insurance fund will reach an estimated 7.7 billion dollars in the current fiscal year. The Government contributions anticipated for the fiscal years 1949 and 1950 will bring total Government contributions to the national service life insurance fund to over 4 billion dollars.

An initial dividend estimated at about 2 billion dollars is scheduled for payment during the fiscal year 1950 to all servicemen who hold or have held national service life insurance. The Veterans' Administration is now reviewing insurance records to determine the status of the fund, after which the amount of the dividend and the method of payment can be decided.

Social welfare, health, and security

In the last 15 years the Federal Government has established a basic pattern of activities in the field of social welfare, health, and security. The national system of old-age and survivors' insurance, the system of regular grants to States for public assistance payments to the needy aged and blind and to dependent children, the Federal-State system of unemployment insurance, and several grant programs for the promotion of public health and of children's welfare were established by the Social Security Act of 1935. More recent laws established the railroad retirement system and grants to States for the school lunch, hospital construction, and mental health programs. Also included in the Government's social welfare, health, and security programs are the older system of grants to States for vocational rehabilitation and those Federal services directed toward the prevention of crime and the apprehension and detention of criminals.

Under the Social Security Act, the national policy contemplated that old-age and survivors' insurance would be the primary Government measure affording economic protection to the needy aged and dependent children, and that unemployment compensation would provide temporary assistance to the unemployed. Other types of social insurance were to be added later to provide more adequate protection against major economic hazards of our society. Public assistance was designed as a backstop, a second line of defense, eventually to be replaced in large measure by social insurance benefits. We have not made progress toward this objective in the last decade. Individual benefit payments under public assistance now are substantially higher than under old-age and survivors' insurance. They are more adequate, in many cases, than under unemployment insurance.

Three principal steps should be taken now to strengthen and complete the system of social insurance, and thereby to make our governmental programs consistent with the basic national policy in this field.

First. Old-age and survivors insurance should be extended to nearly all the 25 million gainfully employed persons not now covered; the scale of benefits should be sharply raised; benefits should be provided for women at an earlier age; and higher part-time earnings should be permitted. (In addition, coverage under the unemployment-compensation system should be extended and benefits made more adequate, as indicated in the "Labor" section of this message.)

Second. Disability insurance should be provided to protect against loss of earnings during illness or other temporary disability, and to assure continuing annuities to workers who become permanently disabled and therefore unable to earn a livelihood.

Third. A comprehensive national health program should be established, centering in a national system of medical-care insurance, accompanied by improved services and facilities for public health and medical care.

These recommendations have had extended public discussion. Action is long overdue. I am confident that the Congress will enact promptly the legislation needed to achieve an integrated, comprehensive system of social insurance. In addition, I repeat my recommendation that the Congress give departmental status to the Federal Security Agency.

The needed legislation includes not only measures to establish administrative procedures and authorize benefit payments but also provisions for financing them. At present, workers and employers each contribute to the old-age and survivors insurance fund at a rate of 1 percent of the covered pay roll. Under present law, this rate will advance on January 1, 1950, to 1½ percent each for employers and workers. The tax applies only to the first 3,000 dollars of earnings of each employee in any year, and earnings in excess of that amount are not counted in calculating the retirement benefits. My recommendations contemplate raising the tax rate on presently covered employment on July 1, 1949, the date when increased benefits should be made available. In addition, I propose that we raise the ceiling on taxable earnings, as well as extend the pay-roll tax to workers and employers not now covered. The addition of insurance coverage for medical care and disability benefits will also require some additions to the pay-roll-tax rates in order that the whole social-insurance system will continue to be substantially self-supporting.

The financial impact of these recommendations is mainly in the trust accounts. For the fiscal year 1950, benefit payments and administrative expenses from the major trust accounts in the field of social welfare (other than unemployment insurance) are estimated at 1.3 billion dollars under existing laws. Under the legislation which I recommend, these payments would be doubled. Apart from this new legislation, they would rise by more than 100 million dollars above the total for the current fiscal year.

The total of budget expenditures for social welfare, health, and security also is expected to rise in the fiscal year 1950, to nearly 2,358 million dollars, exclusive of expenditures from trust accounts. The increase over the fiscal year 1949 is 394 million dollars, of which 147 million dollars is in transfers to the railroad retirement trust account and 86 million dollars is for increased grants to the States for public assistance under present Federal law. Most of the remainder of the increase is divided between present programs for the promotion of public health and proposed new legislation for medical care insurance and public assistance.

Excluding trust-account transactions, new appropriations requested for social welfare, health, and security for the fiscal year 1950 are estimated at 2,271 million dollars. In addition, 92 million dollars of new contract authority will be needed, making a total of 2,363 million dollars of new obligational authority for these programs. This does not include 40 million dollars of appropriations necessary to liquidate contract authority made available in prior years, mainly for hospital construction grants. Of the new appropriations in budget accounts, 84 million dollars is for proposed legislation. All the rest is for programs under present laws.

Public assistance to the aged and other special groups: The public assistance programs of the Federal Government are all carried on in cooperation with the States, and the expenditures are almost entirely in the form of grants to State governments.

By far the largest amounts are for assistance to the aged, the blind, and dependent children, for which Federal Government expenditures under present laws are estimated at 1,064 million dollars in the fiscal year 1950. Each State determines its own scale of benefits to individuals in these public-assistance categories, and the Federal Government reimburses the States for from 50 to 75 percent of the payments in each case, up to maximum individual benefit rates specified in the Federal law. The level of these matching payments was raised by action of the last Congress.

[1] In addition, this budget includes 40 million dollars of appropriations recommended to liquidate prior year contract authorizations.

NOTE.—The Federal-State system of unemployment compensation and the Federal system of railroad unemployment insurance, formerly included in this category, are now reclassified under Labor.

Because of this grant arrangement, the amount of Federal expenditure for public assistance in any one year is not directly subject to Federal budgetary control, but is determined by the action of the several States in fixing benefit rates and approving individual claims for assistance. The total amount of Federal expenditures has steadily increased as the rising cost of living has compelled the States to give more assistance and the number of needy aged persons in our population has continued to rise. This increase in public-assistance expenditures would be slower, and should ultimately be reversed, if other contributory insurances are made adequate to carry most of the load.

The budget includes 65 million dollars as the tentative estimate of first-year expenditure under proposed legislation to improve the present public-assistance system and to help cover State relief payments to persons not now eligible for assistance from Federal grants.

Railroad retirement insurance: The expected rise in transfers to the railroad retirement trust account, from 565 million dollars in this fiscal year to 716 million dollars in 1950, reflects mainly a statutory increase in the tax rate, which has just become effective, and the continued rise in railroad pay rolls.

The estimates for 1950 assume favorable legislative action on several proposed changes in the timing of transfers from budget accounts to the trust accounts. These relate to Federal Government payments for military service credits, administrative expense appropriations, and the transfer of the special railroad taxes to trust accounts. The changes would not affect the benefit rights of any individual or the tax liabilities of any employer.

Good budgeting requires that the law be revised so that payments by the Federal Government to the railroad retirement trust fund on account of military service credits allowed to railroad employees may be made annually in the years ahead on the basis of the actuarial value of claims actually approved as workers retire. As the law now stands, these payments are to be made in advance, without adequate relationship to eventual requirements for actual benefits. We have already advanced 160 million dollars to the trust fund to cover such future claims. Unless the law is amended, a further transfer of about the same amount may be required in the fiscal year 1950, and this would have to be added to the total of budget expenditures.

Good budgeting requires also that the railroad retirement tax be transferred to the trust fund as it is collected, rather than on the basis of annual specific appropriations in advance of collections, as is the present practice. The estimates assume that an annual indefinite appropriation will be substituted, and also that the administrative expense appropriations will be consolidated and financed directly from the trust account.

Public health: Federal expenditures for public health purposes comprise substantial grants to State and local governments to help them combat disease and to meet part of the cost of new hospitals, as well as expenditures for direct Federal operations.

For the fiscal year 1950, I am recommending appropriations sufficient to double the general health grants to States, raising them to 22 million dollars, in order that the States in turn may extend and strengthen local health services. These stronger health services are an essential part of our national health program. I recommend that the present statutory limitation on the amount of such general health grants to States be removed from the Public Health Service Act, so as to authorize in later years the provision of larger amounts for the further improvement and expansion of local public health services. It is clearly more desirable to follow this course than to add new and separate grant programs or to continue to expand existing specialized health programs.

The estimates for 1950 provide for continuing at about the 1949 level the grants to States for specialized health programs, such as venereal disease and tuberculosis. Provision is made for new grants under the National Heart Act of 1948 and for grants for initial surveys under the Water Pollution Control Act of 1948. The Federal-aid hospital construction program will require additional contract authority to maintain the current limited volume of new hospital building.

I have included in budget accounts for the fiscal year 1950 a tentative estimate of 15 million dollars for initial expenditures for inaugurating the system of medical care insurance.

New facilities for medical and related research to be carried on directly by the Public Health Service are in process of construction. As these are completed and staffed, we shall achieve a substantial expansion of specialized types of research which will contribute significantly to the health and longevity of our people.

Crime control and correction: The work load of the Federal Bureau of Investigation is expected to continue at a high level in the fiscal year 1950, largely because of investigations of personnel employed in atomic energy work and international activities and the strengthening of the internal security program. A decline is expected in the inmate population of Federal prisons, and this will permit some reduction in staff, but the saving will be partly offset by higher per capita costs for care of prisoners.

Federal employees' accident compensation: Expenditures under the Federal Employees' Compensation Act of 1916, as amended, are estimated for the fiscal year 1950 at 9 million dollars more than in 1949, but the increase is wholly for war claims payments to American citizens abroad who were injured or suffered damage from wartime enemy actions. These payments will be covered by some of the proceeds of certain enemy-owned property.

Compensation payments to Government employees injured and to dependents of those killed in line of duty will continue under present law at about 14 million dollars a year. The benefit rates have not been changed since 1927. They are now quite inadequate. I recommend that these benefit rates be liberalized. The budget includes a tentative estimate of 4 million dollars for this proposed legislation.

Trust accounts: As I emphasized in a message to the Congress last May, this period of high employment and earnings offers a particularly opportune time for strengthening and broadening our social insurance system. At such a time, our people are best able to begin providing for protection against the major economic hazards to which everyone is exposed. Although the recommended improvements will mean an immediate large increase in benefit payments, they will also result at the outset in a sizable increase in savings held in the social insurance trust accounts. This will help to reduce inflationary pressures and build a cushion of consumers' purchasing power against possible future recession.

[1] Adjusted for proposed changes in legislation.

Despite benefit payments of more than 1.3 billion dollars under present laws, the major trust funds for social welfare, health, and security for the year are expected to add 3 billion dollars to their assets during the fiscal year 1950. This will bring the aggregate assets of these funds above 19 billion dollars. The legislation I have recommended will add an estimated 460 million dollars to these assets in the fiscal year 1950.

The trust account assets are invested in Government securities, and the interest earnings are added to the principal of each trust fund. Although all benefits are paid directly from these accounts, the handling of contributions varies. Pay-roll tax collections under the railroad retirement system are included in budget receipts and the transfers to the trust account appear as budget expenditures. Proceeds of the pay-roll tax for old-age and survivors insurance are transferred to the trust account without affecting expenditures; this transfer is made through a deduction from receipts and an equal credit to the trust account. Amounts withheld from the salaries of those Government employees covered by Federal employees' retirement acts, as their payments to the retirement funds, are credited directly to the trust accounts.

The objective of the Federal housing program is to improve the housing standards of the Nation and, in particular, to help low-income and moderate-income families obtain more adequate housing in a suitable community environment. To this end the Federal Government provides a wide variety of financial aids for both private and public housing construction as well as research and other assistance on cost reduction.

In the past 3 years, housing construction has risen to the level it took 6 years to reach after World War I. Conversions of older houses have also increased the housing supply, and extensive repairs and modernization have improved housing standards. As a result, many of the most acute emergency needs, especially of veterans, have been met, and the number of families compelled to live with others or to make other temporary arrangements has been reduced.

Despite these encouraging gains, we still have a long way to go. The programs recommended in this budget, both under existing and proposed legislation, are directed primarily toward improving the housing of low- and moderate-income groups. These programs emphasize lowering of housing costs and production of rental housing, and provide continued preference for veterans' housing requirements.

Research in costs and markets: Basic to the entire housing program, both private and public, is the use of all available methods to lower construction costs. Technical research on the limited basis authorized by the Housing Act of 1948 has already begun. More extensive technical research, and analysis of housing markets and land-use, which would be authorized in the further legislation which I have recommended, are needed to assure effective use of both private and public funds in meeting our housing needs. The Housing and Home Finance Administrator will take the leadership in bringing potential cost reductions to the attention of industry and of State and local agencies in the form most useful to them.

A census of housing should again be authorized as part of the regular decennial census in 1950. Such a census would provide comprehensive and up-to-date information needed by both private industry and public agencies.

Slum clearance and urban redevelopment: I have recommended for several years legislation to authorize the Federal assistance needed to permit cities to start clearing their slums and preparing the sites necessary for sound urban development, primarily private housing. We should not delay longer in authorizing initiation of the first installments of this long-term program. I recommend, therefore, that the Housing and Home Finance Administrator be authorized to contract for Federal grants amounting to 100 million dollars a year for 5 years. In addition, I recommend loan authorizations of 25 million dollars for the fiscal year 1950 and larger authorizations in the following 4 years, totaling 1 billion dollars for the 5-year period. The only Federal expenditure likely in the fiscal year 1950 are loans of 10 million dollars for planning the projects.

[1] Less than one-half million dollars.

Private housing: The great bulk of the housing of the Nation is today and should remain privately owned and privately financed. In addition to the general aids provided for all types of housing, the Federal Government aids private housing through sharing financial risks and providing a supplementary source of funds.

Over one-third of the new housing started in the next fiscal year, it is estimated, will be financed by mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration. In the years ahead our mortgage insurance system should give increased emphasis to assisting housing cooperatives and production of rental housing and lower-priced sales housing. Amendments are needed for these purposes, as well as to simplify the variety of insurance aids now available. Both the Federal Housing Administration and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will encourage increased production of lower-priced housing by special financial assistance to producers using efficient large-scale construction methods. In addition, as part of our veterans' program, the Government will continue to guarantee loans made to veterans to help finance construction and purchase of homes.

The Federal National Mortgage Association, a subsidiary of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, will continue to assist private lenders in certain cases where credit is short by purchasing federally insured and guaranteed mortgages. In the fiscal year 1950 these purchases, under the present authority, will result in estimated net expenditures of 149 million dollars. I am recommending revisions of the present limitations on mortgage purchases which will result in an estimated 50 million dollars of additional expenditures. In order to prevent inflationary pressures, any such broadening should, of course, be confined to measures urgently required to finance the most-needed types of housing construction, particularly rental housing and housing cooperatives.

As another credit aid to private housing, the Federal home-loan banks provide an important supplementary source of credit for the savings and loan associations, which make about one-third of all home-mortgage loans. The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation insures the share-accounts of its member associations. Both the banks and the Corporation are supervised by the Home Loan Bank Board.

I am recommending basic revisions in the financial structure of these agencies designed to encourage substitution of private capital for Federal investments, to permit them to borrow from the Treasury in the event of any future emergency, and to give the Home Loan Bank Board more specific authority over the borrowing and lending operations of the member associations. Under this legislation, the additional retirement of Federal investment in home loan bank stock in the fiscal year 1950 will increase budget receipts by an estimated 81 million dollars. The stand-by borrowing authority requested for the home loan banks and the Corporation amounts to 1,750 million dollars. I do not anticipate that any use will be made of this new authority except in time of emergency, but it will provide additional assurance to the millions of shareholders, comparable to the assurance now given to bank depositors.

I am again recommending that the Congress provide for more adequate Federal aids to construction and improvement of privately owned farm housing. The new program would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to provide loans for farm housing, as well as contributions for housing for farmers on potentially self-supporting farms and limited grants to improve substandard housing of low-income farmers.

Public housing: Except for 3,000 permanent low-rent units authorized before the war, Federal assistance for new public housing since the war has been limited almost entirely to provision of temporary accommodations under the veterans' reuse program. With every month that passes, legislation to authorize a new and broader program of Federal assistance for low-rent public housing becomes more necessary. Only through such a program can cities make a substantial start in providing permanent housing for the low-income families for whom private enterprise cannot reasonably be expected to provide.

The legislation which I am now recommending would provide the Federal assistance required to permit construction of 1,050,000 low-rent units over a 7-year period. It would authorize the Public Housing Administration to make contracts with local public agencies providing for annual Federal contributions over a 40-year period sufficient to assure acceptable housing for low-income families at rents they can afford to pay. Contracts involving maximum annual contributions of 85 million dollars would be authorized for the fiscal year 1950, rising to a maximum annual amount of 445 million dollars by the end of the fiscal year 1954. In addition, the lending authority of the Public Housing Administration would be increased by 700 million dollars primarily for temporary financing. To minimize the cost of the program, the local housing agencies would meet their long-term financial requirements by selling to the public taxable obligations fully protected by the pledge of annual Federal contributions. Disbursements during the first year will amount to an estimated 129 million dollars, almost entirely for short-term loans.

The Public Housing Administration also has been administering the disposition of permanent and temporary units built under the war housing and veterans' reuse programs. I am recommending legislation to make possible more expeditious sale to private owners of all permanent war housing units, except those transferred to local housing agencies for low-rent housing. Adequate protection would be provided for present occupants. Legislation also is needed to permit transfer of all Federal ownership and other rights in temporary housing (with limited exceptions) to local communities which apply for such transfer. This step would permit the entire responsibility for such housing to be vested in local authorities, who can most readily determine the continuing emergency need.

Community facilities: In accordance with the economic stabilization program, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is limiting its new loans to public agencies to relatively low levels. Other expenditures will be made to complete the Brooklyn-Battery tunnel and to meet other prior commitments.

I again recommend legislation authorizing the Federal Works Agency to provide prompt assistance to communities in rebuilding facilities after floods and other disasters. A tentative appropriation estimate of 5 million dollars is included for this purpose.

Alaska housing and public works: As part of the program to develop the resources of Alaska, I have recommended special assistance for both private and public housing. Such housing is badly needed, but is hampered by excessive construction costs. This budget provides for a 10-million-dollar revolving fund to finance loans and construction by the Alaska Housing Authority. I also recommend a 2-million-dollar appropriation to the Federal Works Agency to provide for certain urgently needed public works in Alaska.

Appropriations and other authorizations—summary: Most of the expenditures for existing programs in the fiscal year 1950 will be financed from the corporate funds of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation provided in earlier years.

New appropriations of 44 million dollars and other authorizations of 1,987 million dollars would be called for under my legislative recommendations. The proposed stand-by borrowing authority of the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation and of the Federal home loan banks accounts for 1,750 million dollars. Slum clearance, low-rent public housing, and farm housing proposals require contract and loan authorizations of 237 million dollars in the fiscal year 1950. An increase of 700 million dollars in the lending authority of the Public Housing Administration would be provided in the fiscal year 1949. It is estimated that 35 million dollars of the 174 million dollars in permanent appropriations, representing anticipated receipts from war housing and veterans' reuse housing, will be spent for current management and disposition activities. The remaining 139 million dollars will be transferred to the general fund of the Treasury without affecting budget expenditures.

Education and general research

It is important to the continued progress of the Nation that we raise our educational standards and expand our fundamental research. At the present time the Federal Government promotes education by providing professional leadership and advice to educators, and by supporting vocational education and the land-grant colleges through grants-in-aid to the States. It also supports Howard University and educational institutions for the blind and deaf, and provides for the education of Indians. The Government provides library and museum services through the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Gallery of Art, and the Botanic Gardens, and carries on general research through the National Bureau of Standards, the Bureau of the Census, and the Naval Observatory.

Expenditures in the fiscal year 1950 for education and general research are estimated at 414 million dollars. The increase of 329 million dollars over 1949 is almost entirely for proposed grants to States for education and for the decennial census of population.

[2] In addition, this Budget includes 6 million dollars of appropriations recommended to liquidate prior year contract authorizations.

In addition to these general programs, many Federal agencies carry on specialized education and research activities which are included in other functional groupings. Some of these are the education benefits for veterans, fellowship and other training programs designed to produce needed specialists, and research for military and other purposes.

Aid to education: Although the Federal Government is engaged in this broad range of educational activities, we are not yet assuring all the children of our Nation the opportunity of receiving the basic education which is essential to a strong democracy. In many areas, teachers' salaries are low, particularly in the elementary grades. Too many are leaving the profession; too few are entering. Enrollments are rising. As a result, overcrowded classrooms and substandard instruction are common. As the large number of children born during and after the war reach school age, the situation will become even worse.

Many States are finding it difficult, even with high tax rates, to pay adequate salaries or to take other corrective measures. It is therefore urgent that the Congress enact legislation to provide grants to the States in support of a basic minimum program of elementary and secondary education for all our children and youth. This budget includes a tentative appropriation estimate of 300 million dollars for such grants in the fiscal year 1950.

We know that a shortage of school buildings exists in many parts of the country as a result of wartime deferment of construction and the increase in the school-age population. We do not know the over-all extent of the shortage, the particular areas in which it exists, and whether State and local governments can alleviate it without special Federal aid for construction. In order to provide an adequate factual basis for further consideration of the problem, I ask the Congress to authorize a survey of educational building needs and the adequacy of State and local resources available to meet these needs.

It has become increasingly obvious that the national welfare demands that higher education be made available to more of our talented young people. We should now determine the soundest and most practicable means of providing additional opportunities for capable young people who could not otherwise afford a college or university education.

The budget estimates include 1 million dollars as a tentative estimate of appropriations needed for these surveys when authorized by the Congress.

Howard University: An extensive building program is under way at Howard University to meet part of the need which results from the doubling of student enrollment since 1946. Additional contract authorizations of 6 million dollars are requested in connection with this building program.

National Science Foundation: The strength and economic welfare of our country in years to come are largely dependent on the advances that can be made in basic scientific research. To maintain and expand the Nation's efforts in scientific research and to help assure an adequate supply of trained scientists in the future, I again urge that the Congress enact legislation creating a National Science Foundation in a form which does not contain the basic administrative defects of the bill passed by the Eightieth Congress. This budget includes tentative estimates of 2.5 million dollars of appropriations and, in addition, 12.5 million dollars of contract authority to enable the Foundation to establish its organization and initiate its program during the fiscal year 1950.

Agriculture and agricultural resources

Federal programs for agriculture include a wide variety of services, grants, loans, and other payments designed to promote the conservation and development of agricultural resources and to improve the efficiency of farm production. They include financial and other assistance aimed to assure reasonable stability in farm income. Finally, they include special aids to farmers whose farm resources are limited in order to give them an opportunity to improve their economic status. The common objective is to promote adjustments within the farm economy and between it and other parts of the national economy which will enable agriculture to contribute its part to the economic development of the Nation as a whole and assure farmers a fair share in the fruits of that development.

[1] Less than one-half million dollars.

The calendar year 1948 was another year of high prosperity for American agriculture. Because of the high level of national income and the continuing need abroad for American food and fiber, cash receipts from farm marketings totaled approximately 30.8 billion dollars—slightly larger than the 30.2 billion dollars in 1947. With rising production costs, however, net farm income declined for the first time in 10 years—from 17.8 billion dollars in 1947 to an estimated 17.2 billion dollars in 1948. This compares with 6.4 billion dollars in 1941.

The ratio of prices received by farmers to prices paid has gradually declined from the peak of 133 in October 1946 to 109 in December 1948. A continuation of the downward trend in this ratio will mean smaller net incomes for farmers in 1949 and 1950, an adjustment from the high levels of the immediate postwar years. This adjustment, prevented from becoming excessive by the operation of price supports, will contribute to over-all stabilization of the economy and to a lowering of the cost of living.

The principal factor causing the fluctuation in total agricultural expenditures is the volume of price support outlays by the Commodity Credit Corporation. This program largely accounts for the estimated increase of 1,230 million dollars in expenditures from the fiscal year 1948 to 1949, and the decrease of 143 million dollars from 1949 to 1950. Apart from price support outlays, expenditures in 1950 for agriculture and agricultural resources are expected to be larger than in 1949 because of the higher level of loan disbursements for rural electrification, larger outlays to encourage conservation of agricultural land resources, smaller net repayments on loans made by the Federal Farm Mortgage Corporation, and the proposed International Wheat Agreement.

Price support: Net outlays of the Commodity Credit Corporation are estimated to be 866 million dollars in 1949 and 538 million dollars in 1950, as compared with net receipts of 200 million dollars in 1948. Because of the very large production of wheat, corn, and cotton in the 1948 crop year, market prices of these commodities have declined to support levels, resulting in loan outlays or the acquisition of considerable stocks in the current fiscal year. Price support expenditures are expected also to be large on potatoes, eggs, and flaxseed.

For the 1949 crop year production of cotton, wheat, and corn will probably again exceed anticipated domestic and export requirements, even assuming lower yields per acre than in 1948. If 1949 production should equal the magnitude of the 1948 crops, expenditures of the Commodity Credit Corporation would be considerably larger in the fiscal year 1950 than now estimated.

As I said a year ago, price supports should be regarded "chiefly as devices to safeguard farmers against forced selling under unfavorable conditions and economic depression." Their purpose is to bring an element of stability into agriculture. At the same time they should not place excessive burdens on the Treasury and taxpayers or inhibit shifts in production needed to meet peacetime demands and to promote adequate conservation of our soil resources. The postwar revisions in the price-support programs, which take effect largely in the fiscal year 1951, need certain amendments to make the price support mechanism and the quota provisions more workable.

Two major defects were noted at the time I signed the bill granting a Federal charter to the Commodity Credit Corporation. The first, the restriction on the Corporation's authority to acquire storage facilities, has prevented the Government from fulfilling its obligations under the price-support program. The second, the provisions removing the Corporation from the direct supervision of the Secretary of Agriculture, divide responsibility and make more difficult the sound administration of our agricultural program. I recommend that the charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation be amended to correct these deficiencies.

Rural electrification: Despite the extreme shortages of materials and electrical equipment since the war, the rural electrification program has made notable progress. The percentage of total farms electrified has risen from 48 percent on June 30, 1945, to over 68 percent on June 30, 1948. With the carryover of approximately 120 million dollars from prior-year loan authorizations of the Rural Electrification Administration, I recommend that the new loan authorization be reduced from 400 million dollars to 350 million dollars in 1950. New loan advances to rural cooperatives are estimated to be 360 million dollars in the fiscal year 1950, compared with 310 million dollars in 1949. With the rising percentage of total farms electrified, Rural Electrification Administration loans may be expected to level off in 1951 and decline in later years.

Conservation: The long-run well-being of both the farmer and the Nation depends on the preservation of our soil resources. To accomplish this objective, the Soil Conservation Service provides technical advice and services to farmers. The ultimate goal as it affects the farmer is a plan of management for his farm which will insure both sustained full production and preservation of the soil. The Federal Government also makes payments to farmers to encourage desirable conservation practices. Expenditures for this program are estimated to increase from 227 million dollars in the fiscal year 1949 to 274 million dollars in 1950. For the 1950 crop-year conservation program—to be reflected in expenditures in the fiscal year 1951—I recommend planning for a 262.5-million-dollar program to include the cost of administering any acreage allotments or marketing quotas which may be adopted, as well as payments to farmers and related administrative expenses.

A flood-control survey report covering the watershed of the Missouri will soon be presented to the Congress. If this report is approved by the Congress, a 1949 supplemental appropriation of approximately 5 million dollars will be required to initiate needed land-use changes and the construction of terraces and other structures to retard water flow and soil erosion on the lands in the Missouri Basin. These operations are essential supplements to the flood-control works of the Corps of Engineers on the downstream channels. Larger appropriations will be required in the years following 1950.

Wheat agreement: If the International Wheat Agreement is successfully renegotiated, I shall recommend its ratification and the enactment of the necessary legislation to fulfill its provisions. Under this proposal, the principal exporting and importing countries would guarantee over a period of years an annual trade of a large volume of wheat within an agreed-upon price range. Thus, the agreement would provide an orderly solution of some of the problems of international trade over the next few years without the demoralizing effect of unilateral action by governments acting independently. Approximately 56 million dollars is allowed in this budget to cover the probable loss to the Commodity Credit Corporation in bridging the gap between the price of wheat for the farmer under the price-support program and the price at which wheat is made available to foreign purchasers under the Agreement. Costs are expected to be less in later years and will be more than balanced by benefits to farmers and to the Nation in terms of greater stabilization of world trade.

Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation: In order to simplify the Government-lending operations which assist agriculture, I recommend that the Regional Agricultural Credit Corporation be abolished, and that its functions and the capital stock revolving fund be transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture. Under this proposed change the Secretary could direct existing farm-credit agencies to draw upon the revolving fund to extend emergency credit to farmers in the event of floods, droughts, or other natural disasters.

Natural resources

The Federal Government has far-reaching responsibilities for the conservation and development of our natural resources. It must necessarily assume responsibility for the development of atomic energy; it must assure the proper utilization of its extensive land holdings which contain valuable forest, grazing, mineral, water, fish, wildlife, and recreational resources; it must provide for the improvement of such public resources as the major streams of the country. In addition, the Government must foster reasonable standards of conservation and development of resources in private ownership in the interest of the national welfare. We should reappraise our plans for using and conserving our resources in the light of the marked changes that have occurred during and since the war.

In this budget, programs are being restricted to the lowest level consistent with the heavy demands on our natural resources for both civilian and national-defense requirements. The estimated expenditures give particular consideration to the serious needs for electric power in certain areas and for critical minerals. They also allow for work made urgent by repeated postponements during and since the war.

Expenditures for the Government's natural-resources programs in the fiscal year 1950 are estimated at 1,861 million dollars, an increase of 245 million dollars over 1949. The largest expenditures, 725 million dollars, will be made by the Atomic Energy Commission. Other large expenditures include 481 million dollars for flood control by the Corps of Engineers and 344 million dollars by the Bureau of Reclamation for development of water resources in the West. These activities represent more than four-fifths of the total estimated expenditures in 1950 and largely account for the increase over 1949.

[1] Less than one-half million dollars.

[2] In addition, this budget includes 391 million dollars of appropriations recommended to liquidate prior year contract authorizations.

New obligational authority recommended in 1950 consists of 1,549 million dollars in net new appropriations and 482 million dollars in contract and loan authorizations, of which 427 million dollars is in contract authorizations for the Atomic Energy Commission. Appropriations required to liquidate prior-year contract authorizations amount to 391 million dollars.

Atomic energy: To an increasing extent our national welfare and security are linked to our atomic energy program. We must continue to add to our knowledge of this resource and move ahead with practical development. Special emphasis is given to the development of nuclear reactors as an eventual means for converting atomic energy into electricity and into power for propulsion of ships and airplanes.

The 1950 budget provides increased funds for the production of fissionable materials and the development of the science and technology of atomic energy. The present high costs of rapidly accomplishing these purposes must be balanced against the ultimate and far greater costs of failure to move ahead vigorously in this field.

Land and water resources: Present high costs of construction and large competitive demands from various sectors of the economy make it necessary to undertake new river basin projects only where urgency is evident. More than 90 percent of the recommended expenditures for river basin development in the fiscal year 1950 is to continue work started in prior years. Despite this restriction, Federal outlays for these resources will be about 1 billion dollars in 1950.

In view of the magnitude of the investment in these resources and its economic effects, there should be careful surveillance of the programs in order to prevent waste and assure sound development. We should apply the lessons of our Tennessee Valley experience without delay wherever they offer promise of improvement.

An essential first step for the flood control, reclamation, and other development activities is an expansion by the Geological Survey of its water resource investigations and topographic surveys.

The flood control program of the Corps of Engineers, involving the construction of major storage reservoirs, channels, and levees, will be limited in the fiscal year 1950 almost entirely to continuation of work on projects started in prior years. Particular emphasis is now given to the Mississippi River Basin but major projects are under construction in river basins on the Atlantic seaboard and Gulf coast, the Central Valley and Los Angeles areas in California, and the Columbia Basin.

The program of the Bureau of Reclamation is going forward on major projects in the Central Valley of California, the Columbia Basin, the Colorado River area, and the Missouri Basin. Because of the great increase in the estimated cost of the Missouri Basin development, the present plan should be reexamined to determine needed changes.

The anticipated shortage of power in some areas of the country makes it urgent that we move forward at a faster rate on certain of the Federal hydroelectric power projects in order to obtain benefits as early as feasible. Two large projects to be constructed by the Corps of Engineers are recommended for initiation in the Columbia Basin in the fiscal year 1950, in order to meet increasing power demands.

The Tennessee Valley, where the Government has broad responsibilities for power supply, faces a power shortage in the near future. Expansion of Tennessee Valley Authority's generating capacity is vital not only for the growing normal power demands, but also for the expanding needs of the atomic energy program. I recommend an immediate appropriation for 1949 to initiate construction of a steam plant to permit more effective utilization of the hydroelectric power resources of the area, and additional funds for 1950 to expedite progress on the project.

Construction by the Government of transmission and distribution facilities is essential in some areas for marketing the power from Government projects in compliance with law, which gives priority to public agencies and cooperatives. Funds have been recommended in the budget for this purpose.

The Federal lands administered by the Bureau of Land Management contain resources that are both large and diverse in character. A large portion of these lands is in the grazing districts of the West and is an important part of the livestock economy of that area. The Bureau's administration of mineral resources includes not only the resources on the public lands, but also those on several million acres of land where surface rights have passed into private ownership. Aggregate receipts from these Federal land resources greatly exceed the costs of administration.

Mineral resources: Two World Wars as well as subsequent needs for world recovery have drawn heavily on our mineral resources. The Federal Government has a responsibility for assuring the adequacy of these resources through intensive surveys, investigations, and exploration; fundamental research; and sound conservation practices. Funds recommended for the Bureau of Mines and some activities of the Geological Survey are directed to these purposes. In addition, I recommend legislation which will authorize incentive payments for the exploration and development of strategic and critical minerals.

The country must face squarely the fact that a major portion of its rapidly increasing energy requirements is being met by oil and gas, which constitute only a small portion of our energy reserve. The prospects are that we shall become increasingly dependent on foreign sources of oil unless appropriate action is taken. I recommend legislation to provide for proper conservation and planned use of the oil reserves under the sea which are vested in the Federal Government. The Federal Government should take steps also to encourage commercial production of synthetic liquid fuels from our abundant reserves of coal, lignite, and oil shale. I recommend legislation to authorize the Government to provide financial assistance for this purpose.

Other resource programs: Programs for the development of our forest, fish, and wildlife resources will be at about the same level in 1950 as in 1949. The increase in expenditures for forest-resource development is explained by the inclusion in this function of forest-development roads, previously classified with forest highways under the transportation function. An increase is recommended for the operation and improvement of the national parks. This increase is in recognition of the problems created by severe curtailment of upkeep in recent years, and the increased use of the parks as indicated by a trebling of the number of visitors since the close of the war.

Alaskan resources: In my message to the Congress in May 1948, I stressed the need for certain immediate actions to aid in the development of Alaskan resources. I recommend in this budget funds for housing, community facilities, and transportation in this important area. In addition, the budget includes increased expenditures for the investigation and development of Alaskan timber, water, land, mineral, fish, and wildlife resources.

Transportation and communication

The Federal Government has a major responsibility in the development and regulation of the vital transportation and communication industries. The Government has, at various times, provided direct or indirect assistance to most segments of these industries. It must continue to do so where necessary. The ultimate objective of such assistance is the balanced development of these industries, to the end that they can eventually provide all necessary services at the minimum cost to the immediate user and to the taxpayer.

A major part of the Federal expenditures for transportation and communication are for basic facilities such as highways, airports, waterway improvements, and navigation aids. As postwar programs have developed, expenditures for such facilities have increased considerably in recent years. By fiscal year 1950, most of these programs will reach a level which is likely to be sustained with relatively little change in the near future.

While expenditures for these programs will increase between fiscal years 1949 and 1950, total expenditures for transportation and communication are estimated to decline from 1.8 billion dollars in fiscal year 1949 to 1.6 billion dollars in 1950. This decline results from an estimated reduction in the postal deficit, in line with my recommendation for postal rate revisions.

Postal service: The postal deficit for fiscal year 1950, on the basis of current postal rates, would be more than 400 million dollars. A deficit of this size is unsound; it imposes upon the general taxpayer a financial burden which should properly be borne by the users of the service.

Large postal deficits are resulting from a record volume of postal business, most of which is carried at rates which do not cover handling costs. The low rates for parcel post have led to substantial diversion of express traffic from common carriers, with the result that the Post Office Department is now receiving a volume and type of parcel business which it cannot efficiently handle with existing facilities. Present rates for second and third class mail are so low that they make only a small contribution to the costs of handling such mail. While the national interest in disseminating information justifies some preferential treatment for periodicals and other second-class matter, there is no sound basis for the extremely low rates now in effect.

[1] Less than one-half million dollars.

[2] In addition, this budget includes 495 million dollars of appropriations recommended to liquidate prior-year contract authorizations.

In the last 2 years, I have recommended that the Congress raise postal rates to bring them more nearly into line with the increased costs of postal operations. A partial revision in rates was effected by the Eightieth Congress, but this did not offset the cost of the postal pay raise which was concurrently enacted. I therefore strongly urge again that the Congress enact at once an adequate revision of the postal rate structure. I have asked the Postmaster General to submit his recommendations for rate revisions sufficient to reduce the deficit to a reasonable level. The added revenue from such revisions, estimated at 250 million dollars for the fiscal year 1950, is shown in the budget under proposed legislation. The remaining deficit would represent largely the costs of Government penalty mail, franked mail, airline subsidies, and other costs not properly chargeable to the users of the postal service. Aside from such costs, postal operations should be conducted on a self-sufficient basis, with rates maintained at a level adequate to accomplish that objective.

Aviation: Commercial aviation, the newest of our transportation industries, is still in a stage of development that requires subsidy assistance. The program of the Civil Aeronautics Administration for modernizing the Nation's airways will assist the air lines in achieving greater safety and regularity, higher load factors, and thus eventually in reducing their dependence upon Federal financial aid. This program includes principally the installation of landing aids at major airports, and of new airway facilities to permit greater precision and flexibility in air navigation. The present transitional program, utilizing types of equipment currently available, is now getting fully under way, and the 1950 budget recommendation contemplates its completion within a few years. Research and development work required for a longer-range program will be actively started in the fiscal year 1950, looking toward a complete all-weather air-navigation system within a period of about 15 years.

New obligational authority for the Federal aid airport-construction program is held to 40 million dollars in this budget. Within these funds, primary emphasis will be placed upon the construction and improvement of large airports which are required for commercial air transport, and which would also have potential national defense importance.

The basic aeronautical research conducted by the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics is essential for the design and development of improved aircraft, both military and civilian. The 1950 budget provides for new facilities, and increased use of existing facilities, primarily for research upon military aircraft requirements.

Water transportation: Promotion of the merchant marine, through Maritime Commission construction and operating subsidies, will require some increase in expenditures in the fiscal year 1950. The budget recommendations provide for the construction of new vessels related to the national defense. With minor exceptions, contracts for sale of these vessels to private operators will be required before construction is begun. Within recent months, the Commission has let contracts for the construction of five passenger-cargo vessels, and has received bids on the construction of a large, high-speed passenger liner. Construction activity on these and other merchant vessels will increase Maritime Commission shipbuilding expenditures from 26 million dollars in fiscal year 1949 to 121 million dollars in fiscal year 1950.

By the end of the fiscal year 1949 the Maritime Commission expects to have determined the postwar operating subsidy rates for all essential trade routes. Subsidy expenditures will therefore be on a full-year basis in fiscal year 1950, and are estimated at 22 million dollars, more than twice the 1949 level. The substantial increases in construction and operating subsidy programs will be largely offset by declines in other Maritime Commission expenditures, particularly those for vessel operation and for liquidation of prior-year obligations.

The activities of the Coast Guard in maintaining rescue stations, enforcing maritime laws, and operating navigational aids, are of primary importance to safety at sea of both air and surface transportation. These programs are expected to cost 148 million dollars in fiscal year 1950. This is slightly higher than in 1949 as a result of the full-year operation of ocean weather stations and a higher level of maintenance of other Coast Guard facilities.

River and harbor improvement by the Corps of Engineers is held in the 1950 budget to the minimum required for navigation and related purposes. Most of the 1950 program will represent work on existing projects. Only 12 new projects, of high urgency, are proposed to be started in 1950.

I again urge the Congress to give early approval to the St. Lawrence waterway and power project. The navigational aspects of this project have recently assumed an increased importance as a result of the prospects for developing high-grade iron-ore deposits in Labrador. As our domestic deposits become depleted the proposed seaway will become an important link between our steel industry and this new potential source of ore. Furthermore this dual-purpose project is needed as a source of low-cost power.

The Inland Waterways Corporation, which helps bring the advantages of water transportation to shippers, large and small, urgently needs additional capital to modernize its equipment. Such rehabilitation should enable the Corporation to demonstrate the prospects for profitable operation of its services, and permit the sale of the Corporation to a private operator at terms which would safeguard the interests of both the Government and the users of the service. I recommend that the Congress authorize the additional capital funds needed.

Highways: Federal grants-in-aid for road construction have been increasing substantially in recent years, and in fiscal year 1950 will be close to the level authorized in existing legislation. Even with this high level of Federal aid, our highways are not being improved as fast as they wear out, nor are they being modernized to the extent required by postwar traffic conditions. Nevertheless, present high costs and the limited capacity of the construction industry make it undesirable for expenditures in the fiscal year 1950 to exceed the estimated level of 501 million dollars.

Federal regulation: Although most of the expenditures in this function are accounted for by the services, facilities, and subsidies discussed above, a highly important Federal responsibility is exercised by the regulatory agencies in this field. The regulation of rates and other aspects of transportation and communication services help to assure that the public interest will be adequately and efficiently served. The general economic adjustments within the past few years have substantially increased the normal work loads of these agencies. The Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Communications Commission in particular have been faced with major technological and economic developments within their expanding fields. Despite these increased problems, the present budgetary situation makes it desirable to hold these agencies to essentially their present levels.

Appropriations and other authorizations—Summary: To carry out the above programs, I am recommending 1,593 million dollars in new obligational authority. Of this amount, 648 million dollars represent new contract authorizations, and 945 million dollars represent net new appropriations. Excluded from the total of new obligational authority are additional appropriations of 495 million dollars which will be required for the liquidation of prior-year contract authorizations.

Finance, commerce, and industry

Except in times of war or other emergency, the Federal Government's finance, commerce, and industry programs are limited in the main to enforcing effective competition and to providing a wide variety of financial and nonfinancial aids to private industry. The principal agencies administering these programs are the Department of Commerce, Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the various business regulatory agencies. I have already discussed the more specialized regulation and promotion of particular industries such as transportation and communication.

Total expenditures for finance, commerce, and industry programs are estimated at 107 million dollars in 1950, or slightly above the 1949 level. To carry out these programs, I am including in the budget appropriations of 82 million dollars for fiscal year 1950, including tentative estimates of 44 million dollars for extension of existing stabilization activities and for new controls under the proposed stand-by authority. Supplemental appropriations of 24 million dollars will also be required for the current fiscal year, chiefly for stabilization activities and for completion of the Census of Business.

Stabilization program: The major economic problem facing our country is to prevent further inflation and to move on into a stable economic situation without an intervening recession. To provide the necessary legislative authority, I recommend extending and strengthening the existing statutes covering rent, export and transportation controls, materials allocations, control of consumer credit, and bank-reserve requirements. In addition, I am recommending new authority for stand-by price and wage controls and for the allocation of a broader list of commodities, for use if voluntary measures prove inadequate, and for studies of the need for expanding productive capacity in shortage industries. Budget expenditures for this stabilization program are estimated at 41 million dollars in 1950.

Antimonopoly program: A strong antimonopoly program is essential for the preservation of our free enterprise institutions. It can also provide immediate assistance in the present effort to restrain inflation. By concentrating enforcement activities in major consumer commodities, conspiracies responsible for high prices can be broken and the cost of living reduced.

A substantial increase in funds for the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice has been made available for the current fiscal year. I am recommending a small further increase in 1950, which will permit more adequate investigation of the extent of monopoly and monopolistic practices.

Business loans: To restrain inflationary credit expansion, general loans to business in 1950 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will be held to approximately the 1948 level. A somewhat higher level is estimated for 1949 owing to substantial authorizations early in the fiscal year.

Collections on national defense loans and holdings of preferred stock in financial institutions continue but at a declining rate, as liquidation of these large depression and wartime programs is now nearing completion.

Labor

In our free enterprise system the conditions of employment of the labor force of more than 63 million persons are primarily matters for the joint determination of labor and management. The role of the Federal Government is to assure that acceptable minimum standards of wages and working conditions are maintained and that both individual workers and organized groups of working people have a fair opportunity to improve their economic status. The Federal Government also promotes apprenticeship training and collects and publishes labor statistics and related information which are used widely by business, labor, and the general public. For the fiscal year 1950, the Government's labor programs will require budget expenditures of 187 million dollars, approximately 3 million dollars more than in 1949.

The Labor Department should be substantially strengthened through reorganization to bring together the units which properly belong in it. Toward this end I shall recommend certain organizational changes essential for more effective administration of the Government's labor program.

Mediation services and regulation of employment conditions: In my Message on the State of the Union I have already recommended urgently needed legislative action to provide fair laws under which management and labor can develop more fully the opportunities for cooperative production that collective bargaining affords. I have also recommended that the Congress promptly amend existing laws in order to establish up-to-date minimum standards for wages.

NOTE.—The Federal-State system of unemployment compensation and the Federal system of railroad unemployment insurance, formerly classified in Social welfare, health, and security, are now included in Labor.

This budget includes tentative estimates to carry out the legislation which I have proposed to authorize grants to the States to foster safer working conditions, and to authorize establishment of a national commission against discrimination in employment.

Labor information and statistics: For programs now authorized in the Department of Labor, I am recommending increases to restore the facilities of the Department to meet more adequately the increasing needs for current information on employment, hours and earnings, consumer prices, and other subjects.

Placement services and unemployment compensation administration: Public employment services and administration of unemployment insurance will require approximately 150 million dollars or about 80 percent of all expenditures for labor programs. Except for 11 million dollars for the railroad unemployment insurance program, these funds are expended principally through grants to States.

Provision has been made, in the reserve for contingencies, for any added costs which may arise because of future statutory increases in State salary rates or because of unexpected increases in State work load.

Trust accounts: Total unemployment benefit payments are rising above the 1948 level, in large part because of increased labor turn-over, the return of prewar seasonal patterns and because many insured workers have exhausted their claims to veterans' unemployment allowances from the Federal Government and collect State benefits when unemployed. Growth of the labor force and liberalization of State laws are also factors. Receipts are below the 1948 level because of changes in the law relating to railroad unemployment.

My proposal to strengthen the unemployment compensation system contemplates that coverage will be extended to workers in small establishments, Federal employees, and other workers not now insured. It contemplates that in some States the level of benefits will be raised and their duration extended.

General government

Under "General government" are grouped not only the general management activities of the Government but also legislative and judicial functions, citizenship services, and government of the Territories. Most of the expenditures in this category are for collecting the internal revenue, interest on refunds of receipts, the Government contribution to the Federal employees' retirement system, property supply and disposal, and the maintenance and operation of public buildings. The Weather Bureau also is included under general government, because its activities relate to several major functions of the Government. Similarly, the general expenditures of a few departmental offices are classified in this category.

[1] Less than one-half million dollars.

[2] In addition, this budget includes 26 million dollars of appropriations recommended to liquidate prior year contract authorizations.

Total expenditures for general government functions have declined from a peak in the fiscal year 1948 and are now leveling off at about 1.2 billion dollars. Although the biggest reductions in war-liquidation programs have already occurred, further reductions are expected. Some increases, however, are estimated in the expenditures for permanent programs and services, particularly, in 1950 for tax collections and the employees' retirement system. Total new authorizations requested for general Government activities for the fiscal year 1950 are 57 million dollars less than estimated expenditures. I am postponing requests for contract authority for a general public buildings program and requesting only 7 million dollars in contract authority for other construction.

Property management: Last year I submitted to the Congress proposals for a comprehensive property management program for the Federal Government. The Congress took action to repeal certain of the provisions of the temporary legislation for surplus property disposal and to provide for termination of the War Assets Administration February 28, 1949, but it failed to complete action on permanent property management legislation. Such legislation is urgently needed to achieve economies by modernizing the Government's supply and disposal systems. This legislation should designate a single property management agency. The remaining functions of the War Assets Administration should be transferred directly to this agency.

At the end of February, the War Assets Administration will have residual inventories of surplus property amounting to more than 2.5 billion dollars in terms of original cost. I am recommending a supplemental appropriation of 15 million dollars for the fiscal year 1949 and 21 million dollars for the fiscal year 1950 on the assumption that a single property management agency will be made responsible for these disposal activities upon dissolution of the War Assets Administration.

Revenue collection: The operations of the Bureau of Internal Revenue have been extensively reviewed by the Congress and also by a special management committee appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury. As a result the Bureau is currently engaged in decentralizing its administration, improving office procedures, expanding its enforcement staff, and training its personnel to do a better job. In addition to nearly 2,000 enforcement personnel to be added this fiscal year, the budget provides for a further increase of more than 7,000 in the fiscal year 1950. The Government has an obligation to its taxpayers to undertake complete collection of all the taxes that are legally due and to assure equitable treatment to each taxpayer. I am confident that the additional expenditures will represent a sound investment.

Retirement system: Last February legislation was enacted which liberalized the provisions of the Federal employees' general retirement system by increasing annuity payments and adding survivorship benefits. Higher payments to the retirement fund are required to finance these new provisions. The rate of deductions from employees' salaries for retirement purposes was increased from 5 percent to 6 percent. It is also necessary to increase by over 100 million dollars in the fiscal year 1950 the Government's payment toward the retirement system, based on the revised retirement provisions and the higher Federal pay roll estimated for the fiscal year 1950.

Public buildings: Because of the present inflationary conditions I am not now recommending a general public buildings program, although in many areas the Government is inadequately housed and such a program cannot be delayed indefinitely. However, I am proposing that work be started immediately on the construction of one building which should be completed in time for use by the Census Bureau in connection with the 1950 decennial census, and will thereafter be available for other needs.

Government Services Corporation: I recommend that the Congress create a new, self-supporting, Government corporation to provide certain cafeteria and recreational services, primarily for Federal employees, in Government buildings and on Government property. At present, these services are provided by several organizations which do not fall within the normal governmental framework. This is essentially a governmental responsibility, and should be subject to the usual processes of governmental review and control.

Virgin Islands Company: I renew my recommendation that the Virgin Islands Company be given a permanent Federal charter under comprehensive legislation. This Company is a chief contributor to the economic welfare of the Virgin Islands. The present stopgap measure, which extended the life of the Company for only 1 year and with narrow powers, contributes little toward making the Virgin Islands economically self-sustaining and raising the standard of living of its citizens.

The National Capital: The role of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission should be redefined and a stronger statutory basis established for the proper development of the District of Columbia and nearby areas in Maryland and Virginia.

I am not forwarding at this time an estimate of appropriation for the District of Columbia Redevelopment Land Agency to provide for the assembly of property in slum or blighted areas in the District of Columbia. When the redevelopment plans now being prepared by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission are approved, an estimate will be transmitted for consideration by the Congress.

I recommend pay increases for the employees of the District of Columbia government, including the teachers in the public schools, who were unfairly excluded from the Federal Employees Salary Act of 1948.

Interest on the public debt

Expenditures for interest on the public debt in the fiscal year 1950 are estimated at 5,450 million dollars, an increase of 125 million dollars over the fiscal year 1949; and the 1949 estimate is, in turn, higher than actual expenditures in the preceding year by approximately the same amount.

Interest on the public debt

[Fiscal years. In millions]

| Agency | Expenditures | | | 1950 appropriations |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Treasury Department | $5,188 | $5,325 | $5,450 | $5,450 |

The continued increase in interest on the public debt arises in several ways. Accruals on the large volume of savings bonds outstanding reach higher brackets each year. There will also be a further increase in the amount of special issues held by Government trust funds, and these issues bear relatively high coupon rates which are, in part, fixed by statute. In addition, the increases in short-term interest rates which were initiated in July 1947 are now beginning to be fully reflected in the cost of the debt. This latter factor is, to some extent, offset by the interest saving which has been effected by refunding maturing bonds bearing relatively high rates of interest into short-term issues bearing lower rates of interest.

Interest payments on marketable issues—issues which may be bought and sold freely in the market—will account for 55 percent of interest payments on the debt in the fiscal year 1950. The amount of interest paid on marketable issues is falling gradually because of a decline in the total volume of such obligations and the retirement or refunding of bonds bearing relatively high rates of interest. A portion of the interest paid out on marketable issues goes to the Federal Reserve banks, and most of such payments are coming back to the Government as miscellaneous receipts. This is a result of the Federal Reserve policy of paying approximately 90 percent of net Reserve bank earnings into the Treasury. Budget receipts from this source are estimated to rise from 140 million dollars in 1949 to 250 million dollars in 1950, thereby offsetting most of the increase in the total interest cost of the debt.

Interest payments are a fixed obligation of the Federal Government. Their payment is financed by permanent indefinite appropriations not requiring annual congressional action.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION—A SUMMARY

Estimated expenditures, appropriations, and other authorizations included in the budget total for programs under proposed new legislation are shown in the following table. The items in the table are of such importance as to warrant early enactment and financing in the next fiscal year. Moreover, legislative proposals for these items are sufficiently developed to permit tentative estimates of first year budgetary requirements.

The budget also contains a general reserve for contingencies. It is designed as a minimum provision both for unforeseen contingencies and for legislative proposals now in the discussion stage, which may require action before the end of the next fiscal year.

The SPEAKER. No; the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RICH. Would it not be proper to return it back to the Bureau of the Budget with instructions that it send in at least one that is balanced?

The SPEAKER. That is not a parliamentary inquiry, and no one knows that better than the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. It is certainly sense.

THE LATE JOHN HARRIS SMITHWICK

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform the House of the death of John Harris Smithwick, who represented the Third Congressional District of Florida from 1918 to 1926. Mr. Smithwick was born near Orange, in Cherokee County, Ga., July 17, 1872. He graduated from Reinhardt Normal College, Waleska, Ga., in 1895 and from the law department of Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn., in 1897. He was admitted to the bar in 1898 and began the practice of law in Moultrie, Ga.

He moved to Florida in 1906, making his home in Pensacola. There he practiced law, and later engaged in the lumber, naval stores, and real-estate businesses.

Mr. Smithwick was elected as a Democrat to the Sixty-sixth Congress in 1918, and continued to serve the third Florida district until 1926. He was the first person who served that district in Congress for four terms, and is one of three people who have been so honored to date.

As a Congressman he served with credit and ability. His record here was a commendable one and the friendships he made have endured down through the years.

Mr. Smithwick spent the later years of his life in Moultrie, Ga., and died on December 30, last. He is survived by his widow, formerly Miss Jessie Vereen, daughter of W. C. Vereen, Moultrie financier, one son, William Smithwick, and a daughter, Mrs. J. H. Moriarty.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members so desiring may extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

INDIAN AND NEGRO SCHOOL CONSTRUCTION REIMBURSEMENT

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENNETT of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a bill about which I would like to say a few words. It is a bill to provide that the Federal Government shall reimburse the States for the construction of Indian and Negro schools. At the present time there is a great need for both Negro and Indian school construction throughout the entire country. This bill is not a bill which deals with segregation or nonsegregation. The bill will apply to all sorts of schools throughout the country. There is a tremendous need today for this assistance, and I know of no other way in which it can be adequately met. It is obvious that the Indians should be taken care of. That obligation has been acknowledged but it has not been fully met. With regard to the Negroes, the "colored people" as we sometimes call them, the obligation has not even been fully acknowledged. But our Constitution provided, when originally drawn, that there should be slavery and then the Federal Government abolished slavery. Yet, the Federal Government never assumed its full responsibility for the things that it allowed to take place. Certainly, those people have a right to have a better education than they presently enjoy throughout our country. This bill would provide for reimbursing the States for expenditures for construction only in schools for Indians and Negroes for the next 10 years. The amount of money going to a particular State will equal the per capita construction cost of schools used for those purposes multiplied by the number of people of those races who will use the structures.

FULL EMPLOYMENT ACT OF 1950, H. R. 1177

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the course of his splendid message to Congress on the state of the Union, President Truman struck out boldly on a new path of economic policy for the Nation. First, he said:

> The Employment Act of 1946 pledges the Government to use all its resources to promote maximum employment, production, and purchasing power. This means that the Government is firmly committed to protect business and the people against the dangers of recession and against the evils of inflation. This means that the Government must adapt its plans and policies to meet changing circumstances.

GOVERNMENT LOANS IF NECESSARY

Then, as a part of his program for dealing with immediate shortages in production, the President added that Congress should "authorize an immediate study of the adequacy of production facilities for materials in critically short supply, such as steel; and, if found necessary, to authorize Government loans for the expansion of production facilities to relieve such shortages, and, furthermore, to authorize the construction of such facilities directly if action by private industry fails to meet our needs."

MUST DEVELOP RESOURCES FOR HEALTHY GROWTH

Two days later, in his economic report to Congress, the President further indicated his concern with this problem of the achievement of an economy permanently stabilized at a high level of activity when, in his discussion of policies to promote balanced economic growth, he said:

> While alleviating the hardships of inflation and overcoming maladjustments which threaten our future prosperity, we must continue to develop our resources for healthy growth. We should press forward at once with some programs of high priority needed now to conserve and increase the strength of our Nation. In addition, we should be prepared with fully formulated plans for others. We cannot accept the dangerous idea that inflation's end will automatically bring about a period of stable prosperity. The continuing need for prudence in Government expenditures must not be translated into false economy.

It is clear from these statements that the President is leading the way toward an exploration of the ways and means whereby this Nation can achieve for itself stability, security, and increasing well-being without the abandonment of those traditional individual freedoms that have been the hallmark of American democracy.

As he said later in his state of the Union message, the American people are going their own way and will hammer out their own destiny without regard to the isms and theoretical formulas that have developed in other lands.

TO UPHOLD HAND OF PRESIDENT

In an effort to uphold the hand of the President in opening these magnificent new prospects for our people, I have today introduced a bill—H. R. 1177—the Full Employment Act of 1950, which represents one way of approaching this problem. The bill is brief and simple and I commend it to the attention of Members of the House. First, the bill would reorganize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It provides for the appointment of seven directors to be paid at the rate of $25,000 a year, with the principal function of achieving the long-range program of production, employment, and investment goals set forth in the economic report. This title of the bill also provides for the establishment of a citizens' advisory board modeled on the advisory board of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion, which rendered such yeoman service during the hazardous days of the last war.

TITLE II. DEVELOPMENT FUND

Next, title II would establish a capital development fund to enable it to carry out its responsibilities. This fund would amount to $15,000,000,000 and would be used to make loans required to carry out its programs.

In extending these loans, the new RFC is directed to attempt to maintain, first, desirable levels of investment not only nationally but regionally; second, to encourage investment in such industrial and business enterprises as are currently or prospectively understood; third, to give due regard to wise use of natural resources and to promotion of the Sherman and Clayton Acts.

STATE GOVERNMENTS MAY COOPERATE

Three types of loans are authorized in the bill. The first type is loans to existing or new private business enterprises, through which the purposes of this act may be achieved. Second, if it does not prove possible for the RFC to find the private enterprisers who are interested in this kind of industrial development required to achieve the Nation's needs, it is authorized to offer to State governments the opportunity of receiving such loans for the purpose of constructing needed industrial facilities for operation by the State. Finally, in certain instances, the RFC would be authorized to make loans to the TVA or to similar regional agencies if such loans are required in order to facilitate the expansion of other private business in the region affected. I cannot emphasize too strongly that this bill is an effort to use the financial strength of the Government to promote the extension of private enterprise production required for the maintenance of an economy of full production, services, and employment. It is not an attempt to get at the problem of employment by the construction of public works. While it may be necessary at some time in the future to embark on a large-scale public-works program as a means of stimulating investment and employment, it is the hope of myself and my fellow sponsors in the other Chamber that the enactment of such a bill as this would go far toward avoiding the necessity of embarking on such a works program for any reason other than that the works were needed in themselves.

ATTACKS MONOPOLY

Moreover, this bill proposes to tackle the problem of recurrent cyclical depressions not by simply an emergency, indiscriminant attempt to supplement the amount of private investment necessary to keep the wheels of business turning, but by the achievement of industrialization in those areas where it is most needed and where unemployment crises can become most serious. In other words, it proceeds on the view that the existence of impoverished areas in the Nation is just as great a threat to permanent prosperity as the existence of impoverished income classes. Next it gets at the problem of unemployment by promoting the initiation of new enterprises in fields where monopoly exists. Concentrated control of industries always limits employment in those industries and this limitation becomes most severe at those times when it does the most damage to the economy. When industrial activity is curtailed, monopolistic industries tend to reduce employment and to keep prices high. This bill would seek to expand competition in those industries and thereby afford more jobs both in the new enterprises and enterprises where the industry is now tightly controlled.

RISK CAPITAL NEEDED

There can be no doubt as to the growing need for some action to insure the abundance of risk capital if this country is to go on expanding, creating ever more of the necessities and luxuries of life for its people and finding ways to make sure that they are able to buy them. Already, it is clear that such venture capital is drying up.

Orders for machine tools, a sure sign in this field, are dropping off even with the stepping up of the European recovery program, which, one would have thought, would provide a large market for such tools in the reconstruction of Europe.

Why should not the financial power of the Government be used to supply this lack of investment and venture capital? I for one believe that it should do so, that the primary responsibility of a government in modern times is to care for both the civil and economic liberties of its people. But it should not do this haphazardly.

If the financial power of the Government is used without discrimination, then the whole objective of its use will be defeated. If it serves simply to concentrate more economic and financial power in those sections and in those hands which already have too much, then in the end the house of cards will come tumbling down.

Therefore, some way must be found of providing such investment capital in those areas that need it most and in those industries where monopoly reduces the number of available jobs and reduces the amount of production made available to the people. The end result of leaving some regions underdeveloped is to cause unemployment. So is the end result of monopoly.

END RECURRENT DEPRESSIONS

Further, in an economy so vast and intricate as ours, there is another problem that must be solved if we are to tackle intelligently the problem of ending cyclical depressions. This is the problem of the flexibility of the management and labor force. In many lines, particularly of consumers durable goods, such as washing machines and refrigerators, our industry has become so efficient that it would be possible to satisfy an almost unlimited domestic demand within a relatively short period. Thus, there is a growing problem of enabling our managerial and labor skills to transfer from such an industry to another where demand remains unsatisfied. Some device for enabling the wise use of our human and industrial resources, continuously adjusting to need, is urgently needed.

COMBAT BOOM-AND-BUST CYCLE

For all of these reasons, it seems to me that some such bill as the Full Employment Act of 1950 which I have introduced today, should be studied carefully by enlightened businessmen as well as legislators, farmers, workers, and other citizens. It would be a confession of intellectual bankruptcy for this Nation to confess that it cannot find a way to combat the boom-and-bust cycle other than by simply hoarding needed public works until an emergency arises and then building them in order to provide employment. Public works should be built as needed, not simply in order to provide employment.

But we ought to be able to discover democratic ways of using the tools of government to insure our prosperity through other devices. And there is no reason why we cannot do this without sacrificing our hard-won individual liberties. So long as we are careful to maintain our Government's democracy and responsiveness to the people, we will get along all right on this score.

NEW BASIS FOR STATES' RIGHTS

It should be noticed, too, that this bill provides a new kind of federalism, a new basis for States' rights. If, under this measure, it proves impossible for the new RFC to make the necessary loans to existing or new private enterprisers, then it is authorized to offer to make such loans to State governments.

In accordance with this provision, for example, my own State of Texas could obtain the funds for locating in east Texas those industrial enterprises that are so badly needed, yet which have failed to provide.

The decline in the dignity and power of the State governments has not been by any means an accidental factor. The subversion of many State governments by powerful vested interests in the years immediately following the War Between the States was as much responsible as anything for their weakening. It became obvious then, for example, that an individual State government could not hold its own with a powerful railroad monopoly, which might have an income and resources greater than that of the State itself.

Such conditions led to the demand for national controls that inevitably weakened the power of the States. This trend was upheld in many decisions of the Supreme Court during that period. Now, however, an opposite trend has set in.

For several years the present Court has quietly, persistently been upholding the rights and powers of the State governments against the demands of these powerful interstate corporations. Only recently, in an opinion read by Associate Justice Black, the Court upheld the right of State legislatures to adopt laws prohibiting the closed shop. The Court did not endorse the wisdom of such laws, but nevertheless the decision was one more stone in the legal structure of new power and dignity for the State governments.

This line of decisions cannot but have the result of renewing the health and vigor of our Federal system, that unique experiment in government.

USE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO ASSIST STATES

In such a context it is more than ever desirable that we use the power of the Central Government to assist the States in economic affairs. Just as the Congress has adopted legislation providing Federal funds for improvement of education, for building roads, providing rural electrification, and for a variety of purposes, so the Central Government should afford the funds for necessary industrialization that cannot be achieved in any other way.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a statement containing the approved budget estimates for the fiscal year 1950 for rivers and harbors and flood-control projects which will be the subject for hearings before my subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations within the near future.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Speaker, the President's message containing requests for funds to run the business of the Government for the coming fiscal year will be presented today. There is great interest in the civil functions program and in order that interested parties may be promptly and correctly informed as to the amounts approved for rivers and harbors and flood-control projects I have obtained a break-down of such projects, State by State, and wish to have it placed in the RECORD following these remarks.

It will be noted that the budget approved amounts are in excess of the funds appropriated for the present fiscal year, and this is readily understandable. During the period of World War II projects such as these were stopped. Since the end of the war many large projects requiring a number of years to build have been started and are now at the period of construction requiring the greatest outlay of expenditure. It would be inefficient and expensive to the Government to curtail appropriations for these large projects at this time for the reason that it would prolong the construction time, prevent the work from going forward at an economical rate, and would delay to the Nation the benefits of the completed project. These projects have all been authorized, have had rather sizable sums expended on them, and there is no question that they are to be completed. Under such circumstances it is only feasible that the work should progress at a rate that will give the greatest value for the funds expended.

For the present fiscal year there was appropriated for rivers and harbors and flood-control projects the sum of $507,480,200, of which $166,989,100 was for rivers and harbors, and $340,491,100 for flood-control projects. The information I am now presenting shows budget approval for fiscal year 1950 in the amount of $659,461,700, of which $229,174,100 is for rivers and harbors and $430,287,600 for flood control; an increase in the request over the present fiscal year's appropriation of $151,981,500. While these amounts are large, it is to the credit of the program that all these expenditures will be made within the boundaries of the United States and the benefits therefrom will flow directly to all our people.

A FANTASTIC STORY IN STEEL

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, a week ago today the President in his message on the state of the Union spoke of the shortage of steel in this country and suggested that unless it can be remedied the finances of the Federal Government might even be employed in the erection of steel plants.

On the Friday following troops toward whose pay we are contributing, troops that we are feeding, in the Essen section of Germany, were called out to prevent the workers there from interfering with the demolition of one of the largest steel plants in the Ruhr.

It just does not make sense for the United States to contribute to the destruction of steel plants there and then call upon the taxpayers here to ship steel to western Germany and the other nations of western Europe, thus creating a steel shortage in this country, and then propose to remedy this shortage by using money from the taxpayers to build new plants here.

The simple facts in this whole situation are fantastic.

We pretend to be rebuilding western Europe, and yet we tear down a plant which can produce what western Europe needs, and use troops to do it, troops and workmen whom we feed.

At the same time we ship steel and semifinished steel from the United States to supply the needs of western Europe. And that makes a shortage at home, a shortage in scrap, and a shortage in ore, and a shortage in steel. And that creates a crisis, the President says, which may call for direct appropriations and Government construction of steel plants.

In Germany there are millions and millions of tons of scrap. There are plenty of workers. They should be producing steel. But we feed them to tear down the plants; we pay out our dollars to carry out the dismantling program and defeat our announced objectives.

A year ago, Mr. Speaker, more than a year ago now, the subcommittee of the Select Committee on Foreign Aid, the subcommittee of which I had the honor to be chairman, spent over a month in Germany. One of our major recommendations was that this dismantling program be suspended.

I introduced two resolutions to give effect to that recommendation. One of them, a resolution of inquiry, the House passed. The investigation that followed developed the fact that a large number of the plants scheduled for dismantling could contribute to European recovery if allowed to continue.

But the story of the past few days is a tragic commentary on what is going on.

Dollars to tear down steel plants in Europe. Dollars to send over the steel of an intensified shortage there. Dollars to build more plants here to make up the shortage created here.

Unless our senses and mental processes are completely deadened, this kind of business should stop.

AMENDMENT OF HOUSE RULES

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Speaker, last Friday the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] addressed the House to explain the effect of the resolution he rushed through the House to amend the rules. He very frankly stated that he took the floor for correcting an erroneous impression of many, including some Members themselves, as to the meaning and effect of the resolution.

Let me say to the majority leader that no explanation would have been necessary had his side of the aisle permitted debate on the resolution. As soon as the resolution was read by the Clerk on the opening day of the session, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] moved the previous question, and the entire membership of the House was thereby obliged to vote on the subject without any discussion whatsoever.

If this is the type of procedure the majority intends to follow in this Congress, I fear that the distinguished majority leader will be constrained to take the floor on many occasions to explain later what action they forced through the House.

PROFESSIONAL EMPLOYEES OF CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes or less.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, in 1946 we passed the Reorganization Act. It provided as you know for the employment of professionals on the various committees. Section 202, subdivision G, of that act provides that if those professionals are let go by a committee they cannot be reemployed in any department of the Government, that is, in the executive department. I have this day introduced a bill to remove that injustice by permitting those men who are removed without cause to seek employment, if they so desire, in the executive department.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. MCCORMACK. I am rather well acquainted with that matter. It has brought about an unintentional injustice. I agree with the gentleman that certainly staff employees of the committees should not be penalized that way. If a bill is reported out I assure the gentleman that I shall program it as quickly as possible.

Mr. REED of New York. I am very thankful for the gentleman's statement and for whatever help he can give in this matter. It is working a tremendous injustice. Many of these men were employed and had no knowledge of that provision. They expected that their work would continue, that they would become experts, and become more valuable to the Government as time passed. Now they are out. They cannot support their families without work. If they seek employment in private industry, private industry will misconstrue the act of the committees in letting them go, and say that there must have been something wrong with them, otherwise they would have been retained on the professional staff.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

THE WATCH-MANUFACTURING INDUSTRY

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to call to your attention the fact that the Reciprocal Trade Act allows the Swiss Government to enter into agreements with the United States to sell watches at half the price that we can in Waltham. The question that comes to my mind is whether we are less important than the Swiss. I do not have to tell you about the Swiss people. They are neutrals. They have always been neutral and we do not want to find any fault with them. But, Mr. Speaker, when a company that has been in business for 100 years; a company that built machines during the war to help run our airplanes, is in bankruptcy and nobody will lend them any money, I wonder if that is a fair situation. We listened here today to a recital of the amount of money that we have to spend for people here and people there and people everywhere. For goodness' sake, Mr. Speaker, let us do something for the people of this country who want to work.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JAVITS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include newspaper articles.

REPORT TO THE FOLKS BACK HOME

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BREHM. Mr. Speaker, events of the past few weeks have convinced me that this and future periodic reports are necessary.

Paid propagandists, employed for a specific purpose, have done their job well.

They have found willing servants to carry their thought-control program.

Some of their twisted and half-truth statements have been transmitted from mouth to ear by a whispering campaign. Other misguided stooges have carried their false pamphlets from house to house. These lying juvenile cartoons made their appearance in the closing days of the campaign; too late for the truth to be told.

Now it is the privilege of a majority of the voters in my congressional district to remove me from office whenever they choose; either with or without a reason. However, I do not intend to stand by and permit certain unscrupulous individuals to deliberately misrepresent my voting record. Therefore at various intervals I intend to submit a report from the record of how I voted.

I am confident that the vast majority of my people are intelligent and if given the facts will be able to decide for themselves. This is impossible when they are being fed false and many times vicious propaganda deliberately planned to confuse the issue.

Let me be specific, Mr. Speaker, and show you just what I mean. In the closing days of the recent campaign, cartoons appeared in my district which said in part:

> Your Congressman voted against veterans' housing, school lunch, land reclamation, minimum wage, rural electrification, soil conservation, small business, labor.

Let us look at the public record regarding my vote on the above-named issues.

It shows that I voted for each and every piece of legislation which was offered to honestly help the veterans and their dependents. It also shows that I tried to have World War I veterans granted a pension on a par with Spanish-American War veterans. One hundred and eighty-eight separate pieces of legislation were passed to aid the veterans and their dependents and I voted for all of them.

The Federal Government made a complete failure in trying to get homes for veterans. Instead of getting better homes at less cost, Government interference boosted the cost of construction by 30 percent. Their plan, if it had succeeded, would have taken already scarce material and labor from veterans' housing projects and started clearing city slums. I am in favor of slum clearance but I am not in favor of denying houses to our veterans at the expense of providing housing for slum clearance. Slum clearance will make a worthy project if and when all veterans are housed and material and labor more plentiful.

The record also shows that I voted for all amendments which provided additional money to be used for rural electrification, school-lunch program, land reclamation, and soil conservation. Various farm organizations will verify the fact that I am on record as favoring and voting for their program 100 percent, and yet the scandal sheets which were circulated list me as voting against the farmer.

The record further discloses that an increase in the minimum-wage law never even reached Congress for a vote. I was not even a member of the subcommittee of the Education and Labor Committee which held hearings on this important measure.

I have letters from the National Small Business Committee, veterans' organizations, many locals of organized labor, the National Milk Producers Co-op, and many other groups thanking me for the help which I gave them and pledging me their full support. These endorsements would not have been given if I had been against their organization.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the public record is replete with evidence which proves that this last-minute propaganda literature was filled with lies and half truths.

Therefore, I repeat that during this Eighty-first Congress I intend to submit periodic factual reports in order that those whom I represent may get the truth mixed in with the propaganda which will be offered them during the next 2 years.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HOFFMAN of Illinois (at the request of Mr. REED of Illinois) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of pensions for World War veterans.

Mr. FARRINGTON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include a letter on statehood for Hawaii and a speech on the treatment of leprosy.

THE STEEL INDUSTRY

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] on the matter of building steel mills and producing steel I want to state that we have in this country an annual steel capacity of about 95,000,000 tons. During the past year, I understand, that on account of strikes the production was cut approximately 22,000,000 tons.

In this formula which has been advocated by the President, I ask the question, "What tolerance is to be allowed between the productive capacity of the steel mills and the amount that will not be produced as a result of strikes in arriving at the necessity for the building of steel mills by the Federal Government?"

Suppose strikes cut production 50,000,000 tons, then it might be shown that the Federal Government should go in and build steel mills to supplement the production which did not appear by reason of strikes. I call your attention to this matter at this time because of what the President has said and in connection with what the gentleman from South Dakota pointed out as to what is taking place in Germany.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RICH asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Bristol Courier of Saturday, January 8, In a Nation Rich as Ours.

Mr. MILLER of California asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. CELLER asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement.

STEEL PRODUCTION

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to take up the time of the House, but when the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD] said that 22,000,000 tons of steel were not produced because of strikes, I must challenge that statement. As far as I can remember, there was not any major strike at all last year in the steel industry. I think the steel industry produced at least 90 percent of capacity during the entire 52 weeks. In fact, I think their capacity now is running about 96,000,000 tons a year. I therefore felt called upon, coming from the greatest steel-producing city in the world, the city of Pittsburgh, to challenge the gentleman's statement. If the gentleman from Michigan has any reliable figures showing that we did lose 22,000,000 tons by reason of strikes, I think the gentleman should produce those figures for the record, because it is an indirect attack on the working men and women who are producing steel in this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] has expired.

THE LATE GEORGE HERON MILNE

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. HAYS of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, the Congress lost one of its oldest and most useful servants when on October 25, 1948, death ended the long and useful career of George Heron Milne, custodian of the congressional reading room in the Library of Congress. The number of Members he personally assisted in the 31 years of his service in that position must almost equal the number who have served in the Congress during that time. The variety and the effect of the research which he performed for Members and their families in those years was enormous. Hundreds of men, now or in the past, in the Congress will recall the patience, the courtesy, and the skilled intelligence which he brought to bear on their requests for information. No matter what the urgency or impatience of the demands of a Member, he never volunteered that other Members already were equally urgently and impatiently demanding his time. His quiet telephone voice has been well known to virtually every Member of the Congress and certainly to every secretary on Capitol Hill.

George Heron Milne was born to Alexander and Isabella Metcalfe Milne on July 3, 1887, in Washington. From 1902 until 1905 he was a member of the staff of the Evening Star and from 1906 until 1909 he worked in a Washington business firm. In November 1909 he was appointed as a messenger in the reading room of the Library of Congress. Soon he was promoted from messenger to stack attendant. In 1911, the then superintendent of the reading room wrote to the Chief Clerk:

> I have placed Mr. Milne on deck 7, which is admittedly the most difficult deck in the Library to keep in order. He has shown exceptional ability and industry in his previous service and has studied outside of the Library with marked success since he has been with us. I regard him as the best suited person of his present salary for this promotion.

In the many years of his subsequent service, commendations were to come often and enthusiastically for George Milne. Toward the close of his service the Director of the Legislative Reference Service, in commenting on Mr. Milne's efficiency report, wrote:

> Mr. Milne is almost ideal as custodian of the congressional reading room. He makes the problems of Members of Congress his own and gives them the kind of superservice that they greatly appreciate. He does extremely well in training new staff members, he has cooperated fully * * * in working with the rest of the Legislative Reference Service * * * his spirit and devotion to his work are almost too much and are sometimes carried to the detriment of his health.

Mr. Milne was assigned to the Library station in the Capitol in 1910 and after a year's service there was transferred back to the main Library, where he secured further experience in public reference work in the main reading room. He went to the congressional reading room in 1917 and from that date until 1 week before his death, when he was stricken with a heart attack, George Milne, day and night, year in and year out, served the Congress with a devotion, a vigor, and a technical skill which has seldom been equaled. A gentle man, quiet, unassuming, and patient, even with all his vast and heterogeneous store of knowledge, his simple dignity and quiet character secured and maintained the affectionate esteem of the Members of the Congress. Whatever their political loyalty or intellectual interest, he was completely at their command.

Mr. Milne was married on May 30, 1917, to Ella Lower. In his private life he accumulated a distinguished collection of contemporary first editions and for many years served as the librarian of the Cosmos Club. In announcing Mr. Milne's death to the staff of the Library, the Librarian stated:

> His self-sacrificing concern with his duties exemplified the highest type of public service.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McCORMACK asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

MEMBERSHIP OF APPROPRIATIONS COMMITTEE

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 43) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That, during the Eighty-first Congress, the Committee on Appropriations shall be composed of 45 members.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL] is recognized for 30 minutes.

THE LATE GEORGE F. JOHNSON

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I take this time today to eulogize one of the greatest Americans that ever lived. On November 28 last 150,000 people in the Triple Cities of Binghamton, Johnson City, and Endicott, N. Y., mourned and grieved at a dispatch which came to them in the papers of that locality and which was flashed over wire and radio to the world. The report read:

> Mr. George F. Johnson, world-renowned industrialist and humanitarian, Triple Cities pioneer, cofounder and chairman of the board of the Endicott-Johnson Corp., the largest shoe manufacturer in the world, died November 28 at his home. Although he had been in ill health for some time, his death was a great shock to the citizens of the Triple Cities, who always had the highest admiration and affection for the man who contributed immeasurably to the growth and prosperity of this area and who had described this section of New York State as the valley of opportunity.

Were this man just another employer, just another labor leader, I would not take the floor at this time to eulogize his life. The fact remains, however, that this was a man who was 50 years ahead of his time in labor relations, a man who believed in decent treatment of the working people of his factories as far back as 1881, when he was a foreman in the first shoe company in the city of Binghamton, N. Y. That was when many employers were looked upon as those who cracked the seven-tailed whip over their workers' backs.

Born of a fine New England family, George F. Johnson had a normal boyhood, participating in sports and studies with diligence. He took off his coat and in his shirt sleeves went into a shoe factory and worked his way from the bench up, making one of the most remarkable careers of advancement that has ever been known in American industry. He was born in Milford, Mass. He came to New York State, to Binghamton, in 1881, and for 66 years worked there and extolled the principle of the Golden Rule, which the industrial life of America can well emulate.

After assuming control of the Endicott-Johnson Corp. he immediately set about improving workers' conditions by doing the things which every employer in America should do today. Fifty years ago his conception of friendly relationships with the worker brought about a program of home building for workers who desired to have homes; and I may say that the 20,000 people who make up the personnel of the largest shoe corporation in the world constitute one of the happiest working groups the country has ever known. They are well satisfied with the home-building program which George F. Johnson brought to the valley of opportunity. As a testimonial of the admiration and devotion of the workers to this man they erected many years ago at the gateways to what they called the Square Deal Towns arches in tribute to his work and to his enlightened contact with his workers. I have spoken of the home-building program which he inaugurated 50 years ago. This has paid big dividends to all concerned. Every worker in the Endicott-Johnson Corp. has the chance of acquiring his own home, of having it built and financed with company assistance, the payments so spread out that he can afford to buy the home, become owner of it and be a forceful and respected citizen in his community.

Another program that George F. Johnson instituted, which was pioneering in labor relationships throughout the country, was the medical program that the Endicott-Johnson Corp. instituted. This has worked out admirably well for its workers. Every worker has free medical attention, every worker has the privilege of going to the medical clinic run by Endicott-Johnson and receiving for himself and his family adequate medical care. If any of his children are ill, he knows he can go to these clinics and get the attention they ought to have. I tell you that is a marvelous thing and is more satisfying than the relations most American industries generally have with their workers. It shows the desire on the part of this employer to do everything he could for the people who worked for him.

The good will which has been built up can be attested in an exhortation George F. Johnson has always had over his roll-top desk, situated in a plain office without elaborate ornaments, and without an air of sophistication. It is taken from the Book of Galatians:

And let us not be weary in welldoing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

Mr. George F. Johnson always emulated it during his lifetime.

In final tribute to him there was held one of the largest funerals ever to take place in America. This took place in Endicott, N. Y., when thousands and thousands of workers turned out to pay him homage for a great life and a good work well done. Those workers, 18,000 strong, were designated as Mr. Johnson's honorary pallbearers and they functioned at that funeral in one of the most impressive tributes paid any man on this continent.

Let me read to you, if I may, the words of George F. Johnson summing up his responsibility to the people who worked for him during the 50 years that he was head of Endicott-Johnson:

If I have the right angle on life, he who receives much must give much. It does not matter whether it is much of power, much of wealth, much of influence or any other good thing. You must give much of all these things if you receive them—else you fall far short of your duty and your responsibility.

Further, he said:

In cooperation with labor, large industries should provide homes needed by workers on a fair basis of interest charges, and sold at cost, with no profit.

They should, if possible, operate a full and complete medical department to take care of the health of workers and dependent members of their families. Thus cooperative medicine will be furnished them for half the cost if bought in open market. All these things are vitally important.

Then he goes on to say, and I think this is significant for everybody in our free-enterprise system to grasp:

My conception of the true relationship of labor and capital is for each industry—honestly capitalized, honestly organized, and economically conducted—to pay its labor as much as possible with a due regard for the rights of the investing and consuming public.

This would bring into control and for distribution an immense amount of capital now squandered by management in useless overhead, taking from labor and the consuming public both what fairly belongs to them, which, if given to them, would change the whole appearance of the picture as between labor and capital.

That was the principle by which George F. Johnson regarded the workers of the Endicott-Johnson Corp. When I was a boy I can well remember playing in the public playgrounds which George F. Johnson built for the Endicott-Johnson workers throughout the Triple Cities—and there are a half dozen of them. He was very much concerned about the future of the youth of America. He was apprehensive over the dangers which might come to those young people who did not have proper recreational facilities. The playgrounds which have been built by George F. Johnson stand as a monument of what can be done with good relationships in the free-enterprise system as regards the working people of America. There is not a single person in the Endicott-Johnson Corp.—and there are over 20,800 of them—who does not love the memory of this great man.

And let us not be weary in welldoing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

That Biblical observation which has inspired many was constantly before him, and caused him to create and to establish the most humane, the most satisfactory labor relationships that have been known in this country of ours.

I am happy to take the floor at this time to pay my tribute to this outstanding American to one who worked from the bench up and built, from first-hand knowledge, a shoe business which became the largest in the world. E.-J. turns out in times of peace vital necessities for the American public and also takes care, as was so greatly demonstrated in World Wars I and II, of the needs in our military footwear. This great organization has been one of service not only to its community but to its country.

I might go a little further in labor relationships, since they seem to be some of the most pressing and some of the most timely subjects of discussion of the hour. This Congress is going to be called upon to make many momentous decisions in the relationships between management and labor. I can point with pride to the magnificent American spirit existing in the Triple Cities; while they come from every nationality, the workers are free from intolerance; they possess the fundamental qualifications which go to make up citizenship in this land you and I so dearly love.

George F. Johnson, among the many things he accomplished for social betterment, was able to establish these playfields, playgrounds, these hospital facilities, this free medical care, which every worker in the country should have a chance to enjoy, at least a quarter of a century before anything was ever done about it by most other enterprises in the United States. It is comforting that a forward-looking individual, one man, should have brought happiness to so many people and thus earned the respect and admiration of the citizens of Binghamton, Johnson City, Endicott, and that section of New York State. The home-building program he instituted offers to every worker the chance to be a king, to gain ownership of the home he lives in.

Suffice it to say that he had a heart, and he realized that if he were to have real progress in the factories of which he was head he would have to treat the workers squarely, because, after all, the workers are the ones upon whose good will the progress of any factory or plant depends. So the home-building program, the recreational pursuits, and the institutions of aid he provided are testimony to the friendliness and the desire to help the individual worker that George F. Johnson had and which he labored so earnestly to carry out.

Oh, it was not all easy going. He met many obstacles in his way. He met obstacles from reactionary forces that were not so generous and willing to be solicitous of working men and women. Those forces tended to work against the humanitarian program which George F. Johnson put into effect 50 years ahead of the majority of other employers in America. They tended to work against some of the forthright principles in which he believed with respect to the problems between management and labor. They tended to barricade and obstruct some of the friendly relationships which he was so desirous of creating among those who worked with him.

As I have said, the best testimony any person could have of the appreciation he received during his lifetime was the spontaneous receptions he was given, for instance, on his homecoming, when he had been away attempting to improve relationships in other, less fortunate sections of the country.

I can remember one time, after he had been on a long tour which took him throughout the length and breadth of America in an effort to promote fair free enterprise and achieve better industrial relationships, when 100,000 people turned out to greet him at the train. As the bands played and as his praises were sung by untold thousands, he went his way to his unpretentious office. Plain as it is, it is still the office from which come the policies of a company throbbing with the vitality of 20,800 people who are satisfied with the high standard of living they enjoy in the Triple Cities area.

Countless thousands turned out in 1931 en masse to greet George F. Johnson when he came home. The same was true in 1935, when he returned from a similar trip, and on many other occasions.

Those were not organized group meetings and get-togethers. They were inspired meetings, where citizens of all races and religions came to give recognition and to lend their enthusiasm and affection to welcome a great man.

Equally inspired, I take the floor today, filled with pride and imbued with enthusiasm to sing the praises of an American entrepreneur who realized that his lasting friendship with the people who worked for him was based upon the principle of the Golden Rule, to do unto others as you would have them do unto you. He realized the meaning of that exhortation in the Book of Galatians to "be not weary in welldoing: for in due time we shall reap, if we faint not." The deeds that he did, brought about a higher living standard and brought much happiness to so many men and women. Those deeds were not in vain because they helped people throughout the length and breadth of the land. They brought to America satisfactory relations between labor and management.

I say at this time that America can well pause to pay tribute to this great man in recognition of that wonderful program of good will and fellowship and fraternity which he brought forth in the Square Deal towns, as the Triple Cities are called. Mr. Johnson will forever be an inspiration to every person who hopes good will in America and constitutional government will survive in this country. He will forever be a hope that the American form of representative government, the greatest form of government in the world today, will continue to bring forth those blessings of liberty which the Americans of my district and the Americans of your district realize are the only proper foundation of an orderly society. Because of Mr. Johnson's good works, men and women of all races and religions can join together for the common good to build a strong and greater country for generations yet unborn. This man George F. Johnson is the personification and the apotheosis of good relations between management and labor. Yes, this message is spasmodic. I take the floor moved by the genuine accomplishments of this man, just as 18,000 workers responded as honorary pallbearers at a funeral last month which has scarcely had its parallel in expressing respect to any man on the American scene since our country first came into being.

The employer who emulates George F. Johnson will have little difficulty with labor. The employer who institutes free medical care to give every worker a chance to send members of his family to the hospital when the worker cannot pay a doctor bill, when the worker cannot pay the bill for maternity care, when he cannot pay for an operation for his wife, child, or any other member of his family, when even the life of members of his family may be at stake, will have little difficulty with labor.

The American employer should emulate George F. Johnson in instituting a program of over-all medical attention, of hospital care; of giving the worker an opportunity to own his own home on reasonable terms. He gives the worker a chance to enjoy recreational facilities; to go on Sunday afternoons to the playgrounds, where he and his wife and children can enjoy relaxation. This privilege is not known to some sections of the country.

The employer in this country must take into consideration the program which George F. Johnson gave to his workers, the public dance halls, the public entertainment centers, the public playgrounds, the public athletic fields. He gave all an equal opportunity to enjoy these things rather than just a few who happen to have sufficient salaries to enable them to join some golf club or to enjoy exclusive membership in some select club. George F. Johnson gave to every worker, to each and every one of them, a chance to relax on Sunday. He encouraged their going to church. In fact, he paid off the mortgages on many churches in the Triple Cities and thus made it possible for them to worship God as they pleased; to give them equal opportunity to enjoy freedom of religion which is guaranteed in the American Constitution, and which you and I have always held is the priceless heritage of American citizenship.

George F. Johnson wanted these opportunities for all. He went further than words. He exemplified his attitude in deeds. He carried out a policy which so many have emphasized only by mouth.

He was reared in Massachusetts, in that great New England State where so many shoes are manufactured and produced. He carried his trade and his business to the Triple Cities area. He built the greatest shoe company that has ever been known. It was built on the principles of the Golden Rule.

I am enthusiastic today in expressing admiration for this man. I come before you to say that the American employer, if he has any idea of continuing this American system as we know it, has no other choice but to emulate and to imitate the actions and the policies of that great American, George F. Johnson, whose memory is loved, is revered, and is respected by every man, woman, and child who has found the pursuit of his daily life in the Triple Cities area. He is recognized as 50 years ahead of his time in industrial relations, in friendliness to the men and women who today so assiduously and energetically revere his memory. As long as the principles of George F. Johnson are carried out on the American industrial scene, these friendly relations between worker and management will continue to grow. It is sacred. It is the very life of our industrial vigor and it is because of those principles that the American worker, during peacetime and in wartime, has carried out the job of producing the necessary equipment for society. As long as that attitude continues to grow, we in America can realize that we will occupy the position of the greatest nation on the face of the earth. We will continue to attain the highest standard of living for the men and women of this country that has ever been known, and remain an inspiration to those countries which have not yet shared this principle of decent treatment of the rank and file of the workers but who are desirous of living in an American system.

In the words of the ancient, "He who would be the greatest of all, must first be the servant of all." George F. Johnson could easily qualify for this exalted position.

THE PRESIDENT'S BUDGET MESSAGE

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I attended church at the Metropolitan Memorial Methodist Church and heard a good sermon by Dr. Edward G. Latch, D. D. The subject of his sermon was, Learning To Take Criticism. As I listened to that sermon and heard a recital of the criticisms heaped against former President George Washington, former President Andrew Jackson, and former President Abraham Lincoln, I was amazed that such adverse statements could be directed against three such great men. Many times during life we have an opportunity to criticize men in public office, and I am going to take this occasion right now to criticize constructively the Budget Bureau which is directly under the supervision of the President of the United States.

At a time when our Treasury statement of January 3 shows we have a national debt of $252,472,787,150.55, at a time when the President comes in here with a budget in which he proposes to spend $41,888,000,000, at a time when he tells us he expects to take in only $40,985,000,000—or that we shall be in the red $873,000,000—some questions should be asked concerning such a proposition. It is not sound nor the sensible thing for them to do.

A few minutes ago I asked the Speaker why we should not send that message back to the Budget Bureau and ask that it be resubmitted and require them to come in here with a balanced budget. Naturally it is supposed to be referred to a committee of the House, but I think it should be sent back to the Budget Bureau. They ought to know better than to send an unbalanced budget of that kind to the Congress at this peacetime.

When the President asks for the expenditure of $41,858,000,000 he is asking for $2,150,000,000 more than his budget for last year. The President admits that this budget is $2,900,000,000 more than the budget for 1950 will be over the budget of 1949. So it is gradually going up, and up, and up. He cannot and never will balance our finances if he does not stop spending. Why does he not sound one word about economy?

Last year we cut taxes. Notwithstanding that we cut taxes, the Government revenues this year show an increase over last year. The President in his budget message admits they are going to be $1,700,000,000 more than a year ago. This shows that two things can be done: Taxation can be cut, with a resultant increase of business to provide additional revenue to the Government notwithstanding the lower taxes. It proves it was a sound thing to do. That is what happened back in 1921, when Andrew Mellon was Secretary of the Treasury. At that time our taxes were cut and the Government revenue increased. Of course, there is a limit to that procedure, and we about reached the limit in cutting taxes; but you have no sound reason to increase them if you want more jobs. Increase business taxes, and you stop progress rather than encourage it. You throw men out of jobs rather than create jobs. You go further into debt and closer to bankruptcy. So stop, look, and listen. Where will you get the money? Why, stop spending. Be wise and economize. Now, I ask the question, If you are going to do the many things suggested in the President's budget message, where are you going to get the money to pay the bills? I have asked that question time after time, but I can never get an answer. I cannot conceive of why the Chief Executive of the United States would permit bills to come in here which are always demanding larger and larger outlays of Government funds.

We have had a deficit in this country for the last 15 years, with the exception of the last two, when we had a Republican House and Republican Senate. There were only 2 years since 1930 that we have not had a great deficit, all Democratic years. It is about time that the people wake up to the fact we are going to have a wreck in this country. It means eventual bankruptcy, socialism, or dictatorship.

Let us see what is happening here in Washington, taking the newspapers for the last week and noting the statements about the cost of living.

Here is a chart appearing in the Washington Post of January 2 showing that the cost of living has gradually come down all last year. Commodity prices are coming down. If you will look at the chart, you will see what is happening in this respect.

Here is an advertisement showing 20 percent to 50 percent off on furniture and another advertisement of a clearance sale in furniture with 20 to 50 percent off. I just picked these out of some of the local papers. Here is one that I took out of one of my home-town papers showing that $6,000 worth of rugs are being sold for $3,90^ Here are some fur sales with great reductions up to 50 to 60 percent. For instance, here is $108,000 worth of fine furs being sold for $66,325. It gives you the items, showing they are cutting down on furs; prices reduced on groceries, on meats, on clothing. Here is one about shoes that formerly sold for $29.95 now being sold for $13.90. This is a high-priced shoe store here in Washington. They also have shoes that were formerly $19.95 selling for $9.99. Here is an advertisement of topcoats, $50 reduced to $39; $50 to $60 suits reduced to $39; $59.75 suits reduced to $49.

Here is an advertisement of the Hecht Co. In January the Hecht Co. prices will come tumbling down. Grosner says that the semiannual sales are going to reduce all prices. You can take all of the stores in the city of Washington and observe the great reduction in prices. Why? The stores all have great stocks of merchandise.

The point I make is that you can go into the stores now and find everything. There is not a scarcity of anything. Prices are coming down. Radios at 50 percent of former value. Competition is becoming more keen. We have a surplus of merchandise at this time. If you are going to let the labor unions come in and demand more wages when all of these things are coming down, you are never going to stop the spiral that is going on in inflation. The time to stop, Mr. President, is now. You have the power to stop it if you have the backbone and the will. It is something this country has to cope with. It is a situation that is as serious as anything I can suggest to the Congress. You dare not let some of these things happen, or I fear the country will go to rack and ruin. We must get common sense or bust.

Let us see how much further we can go when we have a stock of goods on hand. You can buy anything with the exception of steel. The President in his message the other day stated that he will probably come in here and ask that the Federal Government go into the steel business in some manner, either by lending money or, if necessary, building steel plants. Over in Europe there is one of the greatest plants in the world. This is now under British control. In the German Ruhr the workers of Germany have refused to tear it down. We could go over there right now and start that plant to manufacturing steel that is so necessary for the people over there instead of our sending steel over to those countries and bringing it back in the form of pipes, automobiles, and things of that kind. They could operate this great steel plant and take care of the people over there, thus saving us from furnishing them steel, when they could do it themselves, and we save our own steel. Remember that we are over there trying to build all kinds of industry and all kinds of factories, yet here is a large steel factory already constructed and ready to operate, and we compel them to tear it down. We act like a bunch of boobs in permitting it to be torn down. It does not make sense to me. It is unsound, it is the work of vandals, not sensible, sane, sound people. When I think of some of the things we are doing today in shipping out so much of our materials of all kinds, creating scarcity here at home and keeping our prices up higher and higher, I am wondering, are we doing right by our own people in America? I say not.

Some of the President's proposals are good, but do not try to put everything into effect at once and break us up. One thing good at a time, and do that well before you start 10 things, would be my advice to the President. We do that in business, we do it in our home, and we should do it in Government.

I tell you it is high time that the Government bring a little common sense into the things here in America because the President, in his budget message, is asking us to send over there under the Marshall plan $4,600,000,000 in 1949 and $4,500,000,000 in 1950. What for? Why, to build a lot of plants to come out in competition with the plants and workers in this country. You heard one of the gentlemen from Massachusetts a few minutes ago say what is going to happen with these reciprocal trade agreements when they start putting watch plants up there in Massachusetts out of business. You will find that it is only going to be a few years when not only the watch plants but all kinds of plants will go out of business here in America and we will be here raising taxes, when the people in the foreign countries are going to manage things under the reciprocal trade agreements a whole lot cheaper than we can afford to manufacture them, unless you cut labor down 50 percent, and I do not want that to happen. But it will if you let imports put our factories out of business, or else we have no jobs for our workers. And who wants to do that? I do not. I say it is time for us to get a lot of good common sense into our legislatures and here in the Congress and stop some of these things that are being done for others that will only wreck our own economy. We heard the President come in here and ask for a lot of regulations in this message of his. I want to say that he gave 27 reasons the other day in his state of the Union message, and I say that most every one of those reasons that he gave here is a short road to managed economy; it is a short road to socialism, and eternal dictatorship, and it is a sure road to bankruptcy of our own free economy unless we wake up, stop, look, and listen. That is the duty of the Congress; it is your duty and mine, and I am not going to stand here and keep from criticizing somebody when I know he should be criticized. I herewith insert an editorial from the Doylestown Daily Intelligencer of January 7, 1949:

THIS IS IT!

True to predictions, the Truman proposals laid before the new Eighty-first Congress form a full-scale program in state socialism, closely imitating the Labor Party socialism now in effect in England.

It is a scheme of incredibly vast Government spending, with no reference to the Nation's earning capacity. If it is adopted, the weight of the program will call for ever-increasing Government controls—controls at the top of the economic heap, and filtering down to the smallest details of human affairs.

The end result of such a program will be a form of police state. Since the outlines of the Truman plan are not new, but have been tried out in various other countries, such as prewar Germany and Italy, and in Russia, it is easy to know where they will come out. If the American people allow themselves to be trapped into the program, they will wind up under a totalitarian dictatorship as complete as in the three nations just mentioned.

For the initial stages of this new radical departure from American methods, Mr. Truman has asked for a $4,000,000,000 tax increase for the coming year. The great bulk of the new costs, however, will be in the form of invisible taxes—largely tax deductions to be taken from pay envelopes.

The time may not be far distant when the wage earner will find from 20 to 50 percent of his wages gobbled up by the Government even before he receives them.

At the moment when the British Socialists are moving in on the steel industry, and planning to nationalize it just as they already have nationalized banking, coal, transportation, communications, etc., Mr. Truman produced a new gun to put at the head of private enterprise in the United States.

This weapon is the threat that the Government itself will go into direct competition with private industry for the production of steel, if the bureaucrats are dissatisfied with the way the Nation's present steel makers are operating.

He asked new laws permitting the Government to set up its own steel mills any time it wants to—or to go into any other line of production which Mr. Truman's appointees decide is in critically short supply.

This one provision alone, if Congress passes it and if it passes also the Truman ripper of the Taft-Hartley law, would be enough to plunge the country into full-scale nationalization of its basic industries—since all that would have to take place would be for conspirators in the labor movement to slow down production, and thus give Mr. Truman an excuse to open up Government mills and factories.

In several ways the President opened war on Congress—not on this Congress so much, as against any Congress ever exercising the powers assigned it under the Constitution. He attacked a basic principle of American Government—the parliamentary principle.

He served notice, for example, that the moment Congress tries to do what the Constitution intended—to use its own judgment on the kind of laws which are needed and the amount of taxes which ought to be collected—that moment the President will seek to beat Congress into line on the assertion that it is noncooperative.

The Truman forces, in reorganizing the new Congress, went to the furthest stage they dared in stripping minority factions of any power in the legislative branch of Government. All key committees were packed with hand-picked Democrats who can be depended on to do whatever the Truman payroll lobby demands. Neither the Republicans nor the large anti-Truman bloc of Democrats stands to have any say about the handling of the laws which Congress will have to consider.

In two major matters—labor laws and taxes—the President demanded that Congress reverse itself, and that it follow his own individual judgment against the decisions previously made by Congress by 3-to-1 majority.

A basic point of socialism is its unwillingness for the legislative branch to have any real voice in the Government. Socialism needs dictatorial powers in the hands of the Chief Executive; and it seeks to undermine any checks and balances which restrict the authority of the head of government.

Mr. Truman's attitude is precisely in line with this socialistic concept.

In the matter of taxes, he also is following the footsteps of the British Socialists. Every time the British Labor Government has received a new gift of American taxpayers' money, the first thing it has done has been to enlarge the number of those who pay no taxes, and to increase the amounts being given by the Government to the country's nonworkers.

Likewise, the Truman proposals in this field boil down to putting a penalty on energy, hard work, and thrift; and to putting a premium on laziness.

In England, the social program recommended by Mr. Truman has long been known to the Socialists as the Beveridge plan. Mr. Truman demands the same plan—but has picked a fancier (and more misleading) name for it: the "square deal."

Mr. Truman paused in his address to shed a tear for the decline of small business. He didn't point out, however, that it was the New Deal which drove small business to the wall in the United States—which started the herding of American production into one or the other of two great monopolies; either the big-business monopolies, or government monopolies.

The England of a generation ago was often called "a nation of small shopkeepers." Its greatness, in the days when it was great, rose from that fact. Much of the greatness of the United States came likewise from the fact that in earlier days anyone who wanted to, and who saved his money, could open up his own business.

The British Socialists are in process of wiping small business out of existence—along with liquidating the entire social stratum known as the middle classes. Mr. Truman's program, by design or by accident, would have the same effect in the United States.

But the implied hostility to small business in the Truman message does not mean that the major industries fare much better.

As noted above, Mr. Truman demanded laws which would let him put the Government directly into any major industry he wishes. By specific references in his message, he lays a predicate for the Government to enlarge its control and interference, by other methods, in the following: electric power, oil, housing, agriculture, transportation, commodity exchanges, and banking.

These are in addition to his demands for socializing medicine and nationalizing the school system.

In the broader field of ideology, Mr. Truman swallowed the dogma of socialism just as openly as he recommended a specific socialistic program.

Since the world began, it has been the assumption that those with initiative, vision, and skill enough to create wealth were entitled to at least a major portion of the fruits of their labor.

This, Mr. Truman denies. Instead, if he believes what he says he believes, he has decided that anyone—whether he works or not—is entitled to cut himself in for a share of what the worker produces, or buys with what he has saved.

What else could Mr. Truman mean when he said: "We believe * * * that wealth should be created for all"?

This is the essence of socialism, expressed in nine words—the "world owes me a living" complex which has slowed world advancement down to a snail's pace, and which, if it continues to grow, unquestionably will wreck civilization.

It touches the fundamental issue: are you to own what you earn—or do you have to give most of it away to those who are lazy or indifferent or shiftless?

And if a man doesn't profit by working, and is hereafter to make out just as well by taking it easy—then what's the use of working? Why not let's all quit?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

AN EDITOR AGREES WITH MR. MURRAY

Mr. HOFFMAN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, acting under instructions of the chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor, I went to Kalamazoo, Mich., on the 4th day of December last to ascertain, among other things, whether the Congress of Industrial Organizations approved of commando raids in connection with labor disputes and strikes.

Hearings were held on the 4th and 6th, and notice of the hearings was carried in the press. During the hearings, it appeared that the raid and the subsequent rioting were carried on in part under the direction of representatives of the parent CIO organization.

A CIO radio commentator, over a local Kalamazoo station, announced on Tuesday, December 14, that at a union mass meeting and rally held the previous evening, a Mr. Sigman, who was the personal representative of Philip Murray, presided at the meeting.

A subpena had previously been, and another was subsequently, issued, asking Mr. Murray to appear first in Kalamazoo and then in Washington so that he might publicly express approval or disapproval of the commando raid carried out by individuals wearing CIO buttons and professing to act in the interests of the CIO.

Mr. Murray did not appear in Washington—the subpena for his appearance in Kalamazoo was not served in time to give him an opportunity to appear there—and gave as his reason the opinion of his counsel that there was no authority for a congressional one-man subcommittee.

One of the editors of the Cleveland Plain Dealer wrote an editorial, which was later republished in the CIO News, in the last paragraph of which it was asserted that, in the opinion of the editor, I acted either because of a desire for publicity or to satisfy a long-standing grudge against organized labor, and not to adduce information helpful to Congress.

My answer to the editor, and a copy of the editorial, reads as follows:

JANUARY 4, 1949.

EDITOR, THE CLEVELAND PLAIN DEALER,
Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: Editors of so-called conservative papers often complain of what they charge is a lack of courage on the part of their congressional Representatives who fail to expose or oppose movements which the editors think tend to destroy constitutional government. These editors profess to fail to understand why more public servants do not take a forthright position on some controversial issues.

Perhaps the answer may be found in such editorials as the one printed in the January 3 issue of the CIO News, entitled, "'Murray Was Right' in Defying Representative CLARE HOFFMAN," quoting an editorial from the Cleveland Plain Dealer, under the caption, "Murray Was Right."[1]

Murray did not, as stated in the CIO News, defy HOFFMAN. He, as you charged, challenged the legal right of Congress, through a one-man subcommittee, to subpena a witness. If the Cleveland Plain Dealer agrees with Mr. Murray that a one-man subcommittee has no right to issue a subpena, it will find—if it will examine the authorities hereinafter cited—that it is in error.

If the reprint is accurate, a part of the answer to the apparent lack of courage of public servants is found in the last paragraph, wherein you write:

"In our judgment, HOFFMAN'S action was motivated more by a desire to be meddlesome, to satisfy his long-standing grudge against organized labor and to get publicity for himself, rather than to adduce information helpful to Congress."

That type of typical gratuitous insult may be one of the reasons why many a Senator and Congressman remains silent when inclined to speak.

The quoted paragraph contains two conclusions, neither of which is justified by the record. It assumes that I have a grudge against organized labor; that my motive in subpenaing Murray was to gain publicity.

I doubt if you can cite one word, one act of mine, in 14 years of service, which shows that I have a grudge against organized labor. I have been fighting goon squads and a certain type of so-called labor leader ever since 1937, and that course I shall continue so long as I have breath and opportunity. But it does not follow that I oppose either employees or organized labor any more than it would follow that, because you condemn unfair monopolistic practices on the part of some corporations, you are opposed to what is known as "free enterprise."

You are entitled to your opinion as to whether I act from honest, sincere motives or merely to obtain publicity. As to the publicity angle, let me say this: You print the news. I do not. The fact is—I can get no publicity except as the gentlemen of the press or radio commentators publicize what I say or do. If I get undue publicity, you are a party to it. You fall for what you say is merely a stunt on my part.

When refusing to appear, Murray justified his refusal to answer to a subpena of a one-man House subcommittee by writing to me, in part:

[1] Copy of the Cleveland Plain Dealer editorial is attached to this letter.

"I am advised by counsel that the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 does not confer on standing committees (or subcommittees) of the House, other than the Committee on Un-American Activities, authority to issue subpenas."

Common sense, as well as an examination of the law, will show that Mr. Murray's counsel is mistaken. The very first words of section 1 of article I of the Constitution of the United States are these:

"All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

One without legal training knows that Congress cannot legislate effectively and intelligently without making investigations. The average citizen knows that neither the Senate nor the House can legislate without the approval of the other. High school students know that constitutional provisions cannot be overridden by the Congress. Hence, it follows that the House, as well as the Senate, under the Constitution, has authority to hold investigations by committees; subpena witnesses, compel the giving of testimony which is necessary to enable it to function under the Constitution.

But the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 did not limit the authority of standing committees of the House, take from the House its authority to make rules to govern its procedure, nor could it destroy the investigatory power which is an essential part of the authority granted to and the duty imposed upon the House as well as the Senate to legislate.

It is true that section 134 (a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 authorizes standing committees of the Senate, including subcommittees of such committees, to hold hearings, issue subpenas, and require the attendance of witnesses, and that it does not confer a like power upon standing committees of the House and subcommittees of such committees.

However, section 101 (a) of the act expressly provides that the sections of the Legislative Reorganization Act "supersede other rules only [2] to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and (b) with full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change such rules (so far as relating to the procedure in such House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of such House."

Moreover section 121 (f) of the act provides that "The rules of the House are hereby made the rules of its standing committees so far as applicable."

Under section 121 (f), from which I have quoted, the House at any time had the right to prescribe rules for the conduct of its business.

On February 21, 1947, the House adopted House Resolution 111. That resolution authorized the Committee on Education and Labor, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, to make investigations * * * to sit and hold hearings "whether the House is in session, has recessed, or has adjourned * * * and to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance and testimony of such witnesses as it deems necessary."

It further provides that: "Subpenas may be issued over the signature of the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee designated by him * * *. The chairman of the committee or any member thereof may administer oaths to witnesses."

There is a Federal statute authorizing committees to issue subpenas, and section 191 of title 2 of United States Code, authorizes any chairman of any committee and any Member of either House to administer an oath to witnesses. Sections 192 and 194 of title 2 make it an offense for a witness to refuse to appear or to testify before a House committee.

When the House Committee on Education and Labor was organized on the 27th day of January 1947, "The chairman was given authority to appoint standing subcommittees and, at the same time, authorized to designate special committees when, in the opinion of the chairman, such action was deemed advisable."

Mr. LESINSKI and two other members of the committee were not present at this organization meeting. Perhaps that accounts for Mr. LESINSKI's mistaken opinion given to Mr. Murray.

House Resolution 111, Eightieth Congress, and the committee's action expressly authorized the House Committee on Education and Labor, acting through its chairman, Mr. Hartley, to do just what it did in this case. The committee's action, just referred to, was taken on January 27, 1947.

As long ago as 1927, the United States Supreme Court, in McGrain v. Daugherty (273 U. S. 135), held that congressional committees not only had the power, but that it was their duty, to hold hearings to ascertain the kind of legislation the Congress should enact. Nor would it seem the authority of the House Committee on Education and Labor to act through a one-man subcommittee is open to doubt.

In United States v. Morris (300 U. S. Supreme Court Reports 566 (October 1936)), the United States Supreme Court upheld the conviction of a witness who testified falsely before a two-man committee. In the course of its opinion, the Court said, "The committee (of five) so appointed, authorized Senator Nye, the chairman, to act as a subcommittee and to name a subcommittee of one or more members." (Note the word "one".) In that particular case, Mr. Nye named himself and Senator Dale. The Supreme Court clearly recognized the right of the full committee of five to authorize the chairman (one man) to appoint a subcommittee of one or more.

Now, mark you, it is not contended that a one-man subcommittee is the better procedure in all cases. The executive departments and agencies in many, many cases hold hearings, make reports of their finding through a single individual. From a practical, political standpoint, this being a two-party Government, legislative committees should consist of at least one representative from both parties. And that has been the usual procedure, though the majority party usually, by appointment of subcommittee members, retains control. But there have without criticism been many one-man committees.

The House Labor Committee during the past session found the volume of work so great, its members so occupied with their varied duties, that it was physically impossible to hold the necessary hearings by subcommittees consisting of more than one member from each party.

From September 5, 1947, to December 22, 1948, the House Committee on Education and Labor, or subcommittees thereof, sat on 302 days, held 47 hearings, which would have given, had all been printed, more than 21,000 pages of printed record, and that does not include committee reports. The above figures, furnished by a staff member, do not cover all hearings and reports.

From a legal standpoint, you and Mr. Murray are wrong in assuming that he was justified in refusing to appear in answer to a subpena.

I agree with you and with Mr. Murray that the better rule would be that in hearings where there is a controversial political issue, both the majority and minority parties should be represented. But the failure to so provide does not make a one-man subcommittee impotent.

Let us take up the question of motive. What you refer to as a "commando" raid, was made by several hundred people, wearing CIO buttons, who traveled from the eastern side of Michigan, a distance of some 150 miles, to Kalamazoo, Mich., where, before dawn on December 1, they maliciously injured real property—a felony; burned an employee's truck, causing damage exceeding $100—a felony; overturned and injured employees' automobiles—a felony if the damage exceeded $100; beat defenseless workers, both men and women; defied and threatened police officers.

International representatives of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, of which Mr. Murray is president, according to the press, publicly assumed responsibility for the raid. At a mass meeting of Local 3619, they stated, in substance, that the Congress of Industrial Organizations, from whom they take orders and of which Mr. Murray is president, supported the position of the Kalamazoo local in this strike.

Mr. Murray, as president of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, speaks for several million members. In holding hearings to ascertain the facts in connection with what you call the "commando" raid on Kalamazoo, was it not the logical thing for me to subpena the head of the organization which has jurisdiction over those engaged in the raid? Is not organized labor, is not the public, entitled to an unequivocal statement from Mr. Murray as to his position in connection with such a raid made in support of a picket line maintained by a local of the international and directed by international representatives and agents? Was the subcommittee seeking publicity in subpenaing Mr. Murray or was it going to the fountainhead for information to which the public was entitled?

Had I not every reason to assume that Mr. Murray would welcome the opportunity to publicly condemn such actions? That he would publicly announce that he would discipline those responsible for the raid?

Mr. Murray, after a delay of several years, publicly denounced the Communists within affiliated CIO organizations. That was a fine, patriotic stand and was so heralded by the press and the public.

If every Member of Congress, if every public official, is to be accused of publicity hunting when he ventures to question responsible officials of organizations under whose auspices and direction admitted illegal, vicious, cowardly acts have been committed; is to be denounced by editorials in conservative, supposedly accurate, papers like the Cleveland Plain Dealer, do you still wonder why some representatives of the public, who are so often accused of being cowardly, venture to speak out?

You have "guts" enough to jump on me, but have you enough "guts" to jump on labor leaders who refuse to denounce violations of law and who exercise tremendous political and economic power?

It is one thing, Mr. Editor, to give me a kicking around when I venture to give Mr. Murray, the leader of several million workers, an opportunity to explain his position on "commando" raids. It is something else again to ask why Mr. Murray relied upon a technicality—if such it be—in refusing to appear and make clear this deplorable union "commando" raid.

Enclosed you will find copy of a report I made on the Kalamazoo situation. It is somewhat repetitious because there was no opportunity to rewrite it, but it contains Mr. Murray's letter and my own. The hearings, a copy of which will, when released, be sent you, will show at least some of the vicious, cowardly acts of the men wearing CIO buttons who were acting for Local 3619, USA–CIO, for whose conduct, according to the press, an international officer assumed full responsibility. Mr. Murray did not choose to condemn that "commando" raid by appearing before the House subcommittee; his reason, as given to me, being that the subcommittee had no legal authority, that it was a subcommittee of one.

Sincerely yours,

CLARE E. HOFFMAN.

MURRAY WAS RIGHT

(Reprint of an editorial from the Cleveland Plain Dealer)

CIO President Murray was completely justified, this newspaper believes, in refusing to obey a subpena issued by a one-man subcommittee of the House Labor Committee, consisting of Representative HOFFMAN.

Murray challenged the validity of the subpena on the ground that there was no legal authority for HOFFMAN'S appointment as a one-man subcommittee. He also expressed the opinion that any subcommittee ought to include representation from the minority party in Congress as well as the majority.

Even HOFFMAN conceded that the authority of a one-man subcommittee was debatable.

Murray's action has focused attention on an issue which should be resolved by the next Congress. That is the establishment of an orderly and uniform procedure for the conduct of investigations and hearings conducted by congressional committees.

There is no question that Congress has virtually unlimited authority to investigate matters which have any bearing whatsoever on legislative enactments proposed or in effect. It can investigate its own Members or other branches of the Government.

Thus the powers of a legislative committee are extremely broad, but the procedure for the conduct of a legislative investigation has never been explicitly defined. For that reason there has been widespread criticism of the manner in which various congressional investigations have been handled. Each committee has been a law unto itself, and has made its own rules. The result, in some cases, has been chaotic and has led to grave injustices.

The situation should be corrected, without in any way impairing the investigating powers of Congress, if Congress would establish a uniform procedure under which all committees would be required to function.

We have several suggestions along this line. No subcommittee should be appointed except by a majority vote of the full committee, not merely by the chairman or a majority of those present. No subcommittee should consist of less than three members, or be composed entirely of members of one political party. And no subcommittee report should be made public until after it has been approved by a majority vote of the entire committee.

These provisions would put a curb on Congressmen who are overenthusiastic, irresponsible, or whose main objective is publicity.

Witnesses also should be protected by a stipulation that they could confer with their attorneys if they so desired, although counsel for witnesses should not be permitted to take part in the proceedings. Also any person accused of misconduct in a public hearing before a congressional committee should have the right to confront his accuser and to testify in rebuttal.

Our approval of Murray's refusal to obey Hoffman's subpena does not mean that we believe there was anything improper in the subject Hoffman was proposing to investigate. He wanted to find out who was responsible for organizing and carrying out a "commando" raid on an industrial plant in Michigan which was attempting to operate in spite of a strike. Such violence is unlawful and cannot be condoned, and the House Labor Committee has every right to investigate it if it believes such an investigation would be helpful in framing legislation to prevent a repetition of such an outrage.

But we doubt whether the full committee or a subcommittee appointed with the approval of the full committee would have gone to the extreme Hoffman did in calling Murray as a witness.

In our judgment, HOFFMAN'S action was motivated more by a desire to be meddlesome, to satisfy his long-standing grudge against organized labor, and to get publicity for himself rather than to adduce information helpful to Congress.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JANUARY 13, 1949

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Stop us, O God, for a minute of prayer.

Stop our anxious minds from wandering, and our hearts from desiring anything but to know Thy will.

Let us stand at attention before Thee and hear what Thou hast to say to us.

We believe that Thou canst tell us not only what to do but also how to do it.

If it needs making up our minds, Thou who didst make our minds canst show us how to make them up.

If it needs changing our minds, Thou canst work that miracle, too.

Speak, O Lord, and make us hear, for Jesus' sake. Amen.

ATTENDANCE OF SENATORS

DENNIS CHAVEZ, a Senator from the State of New Mexico, and WARREN G. MAGNUSON, a Senator from the State of Washington, appeared in their seats today.

NOMINATION OF HON. CARL A. HATCH

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, the President has sent to the Senate the nomination of Hon. Carl A. Hatch to be Federal judge for the district of New Mexico. As we all know, Mr. Hatch was a Member of this body up to the present

I feel certain that if the Senator from Nevada were present he would have made a motion that the nomination be confirmed. At a later date I intend to say a few words about my former colleague, Hon. Carl A. Hatch.

PETITION

THE POLL TAX—PETITION

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I present for appropriate reference a petition signed by the mayor and sundry other citizens of Jackson, Mich., relating to the poll tax, and I ask unanimous consent that the petition, together with the names of the signers of the petition, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition, together with the signatures, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

We, citizens of the city in which the Republican Party first asserted its belief in equality of opportunity for all Americans, respectfully present to the Congress our appeal for further progress in the implementation of that belief.

We remind ourselves and the Congress of the profound promise made 94 years ago by the founders of the Republican Party under Jackson's spreading oaks: "That the law of nature, which is the law of liberty, gives to no man rights superior to those of another." And we urge that the pledges reiterated in the Republican platform of 1948 be given sincere consideration by the Eighty-first Congress, pledges which promised to abolish the poll tax, to legislate against lynching, to extend equal educational opportunities and to advance those other rights which are part of our concept of freedom. While we petition in prideful memory of the founders of the Republican Party, we speak without partisan consideration as both Democrats and Republicans, for we are aware that also in 1948 the Democratic Party pledged itself to support legislation which would guarantee the rights of full and equal political participation, the right to equal opportunity of employment, and the right of security of person.

We humbly acknowledge our own failures to be true to the Republican principles of Lincoln, the Democratic principles of Jefferson and of this city's namesake, Andrew Jackson, in recognition of human rights. Such failures are not limited to any certain section of our country. We pledge ourselves in our own community and state to seek rectification of those injustices under which minority groups live.

Cognizant of the concern with which good people of our Southern States contemplate these issues, we propose no belligerent approach to a problem the gravity of which all good Americans must acknowledge. Yet progress has been made, great progress, and we appeal for further steps to bring all Americans to a plane of democratic equality in opportunity and in Government.

Therefore, we, citizens of Jackson, call on the leaders of both parties to unite in the Congress behind their own party platforms and make 1949 the year of advancement toward the hopes and aspirations of all God-fearing people, as reaffirmed in 1854 in our own city when the Republican Party came into being.

James N. House, Mayor; Munro S. Furman, President, Greater Jackson Association; Mrs. W. K. McInally, President, Woman's Club; Thomas Morano, President, CIO Council, Jackson; Robert E. Lee, President, Jackson County Federation of Labor; C. W. Moulton, President, Jackson County Realty Board; Mrs. John Maher, President, Jackson City Council, PTA; Lacerne Patch, Chairman, Board of Supervisors; G. L. Greenawalt, Superintendent of Schools; Carl M. Saunders, Editor, Jackson Citizen-Patriot; Floyd J. Poole, County Clerk; Mrs. Hugh T. Roberts, Republican County Vice Chairman; L. M. Godden, President, Junior Chamber of Commerce; H. E. Handley, President, Board of Education; Mrs. T. J. Powell, President, Jackson Business and Professional Club; E. D. Cattell, City Clerk; Mrs. Hubert E. Cox, President, University of Michigan Alumnae; W. Earl Holman, President, Jackson Exchange Club; Mrs. N. Bannasch, State Representative; Stanley Shoemaker, President, Jackson Teacher Club; Clarence H. Elliott, City Manager; Vincent Holda, City Commissioner; William D. Hunt, City Commissioner; James F. Thomson, Republican County Chairman; James C. Mead, President, Jackson County Ministerial Association; Mrs. A. D. Vetesk, President, YWCA Board; Howard F. Andrews, Jackson County Council of Churches; C. J. Straayer, Jackson Optimists Club; and More Than 300 Others.

HOLIDAYS FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES ON JANUARY 20 AND 21

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, from the Committee on the Judiciary, I report favorably without amendment Senate Joint Resolution 16, making January 20 and 21, 1949, holidays for Federal employees and employees of the District of Columbia in the metropolitan area of the District of Columbia.

At the appropriate time during the afternoon a request will be made for unanimous consent to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received.

PRINTING OF REVISED EDITION OF RULES AND MANUAL OF THE SENATE

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report an original routine resolution providing for the preparation and printing of a revised edition of the Senate Manual, which has been unanimously recommended by the committee, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution (S. Res. 25), as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 238, Eightieth Congress, a resolution providing for the preparation and printing of the Senate Rules and Manual for the Eighty-first Congress is hereby rescinded; and be it further

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules and Administration be, and it is hereby, directed to prepare a revised edition of the Senate Rules and Manual for the use of the Eighty-first Congress, and that 1,500 additional copies shall be printed and bound, of which 1,000 copies shall be for the Senate, 200 copies for the use of the Committee on Rules and Administration, and the remaining 300 copies shall be bound in full morocco and tagged as to contents and delivered as may be directed by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I understand that this is a regular resolution that provides for the printing of 1,500 copies of the Senate Rules and Manual.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes; for the Eighty-first Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. And it is in line with the usual procedure at the beginning of Congress.

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I have no objection.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to suggest that it might be practicable to defer the printing of the Senate Manual until we have amended the rules regarding filibusters. That would obviate the necessity for another reprinting of the rules within a short time after the printing provided for in the resolution presented by the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. HAYDEN. Can the Senator from Maine indicate on what day certain that change will be made?

Mr. BREWSTER. Well, Mr. President, I defer to the judgment of the Senator from Arizona, who is chairman of the committee in charge of the matter. I am sure, however, that unless we settle the question now it never will be settled.

Mr. HAYDEN. I am not a prophet. I make no prediction.

Mr. BREWSTER. The Senator does not have a crystal ball in which he can gaze and tell us how soon we can secure amendment of the cloture rule.

Mr. HAYDEN. No.

Mr. BREWSTER. Does the Senator have in mind perhaps when it will be taken up?

Mr. HAYDEN. It will be taken up for hearing by the committee on the 24th of January.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 25) was considered and agreed to.

MEMBERS ON PART OF SENATE OF JOINT COMMITTEES ON PRINTING AND LIBRARY, RESPECTIVELY

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report an original resolution providing for Members on the part of the Senate of the Joint Committees on Printing and the Library, respectively, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 26) was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the following-named Members be, and they are hereby, elected members of the following joint committees of Congress:

Joint Committee on Printing: Mr. HAYDEN, of Arizona; Mr. HUNT, of Wyoming; Mr. JENNER, of Indiana.

ADDITIONAL CLERK FOR CALIFORNIA SENATORS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report favorably without amendment Senate Resolution 20, submitted by the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY] on January 6, 1949, and I submit a report (No. 3) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The clerk will read the resolution for the information of the Senate.

The clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That until an appropriation shall be made to pay the compensation of the additional clerk to which each Senator from the State of California is entitled by reason of the fact that the population of such State exceeds 10,000,000, there is authorized to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate the compensation of an additional clerk to each of the Senators from such State at the basic rate of $1,500 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. President, will the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules and Administration explain why such clerks are provided?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes. There is a provision in the rules that any State which has a population of more than 10,000,000 shall be allowed an additional clerk for each Senator representing such State. California, according to the latest United States census report available to the committee, now has a population in excess of 10,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. Has the committee unanimously endorsed the request?

Mr. HAYDEN. The committee has; yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered and agreed to.

"Resolved, That in no case shall a page of the Senate be appointed for duty in the Senate Chamber who is younger than 12 years, or remain in office after the age of 16 years," be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"Resolved, That in no case shall a page of the Senate be appointed for duty in the Senate Chamber who is younger than 14 years, or remain in office after the age of 17 years, and who has not completed the eighth grade of school."

ADDITIONAL EXPENDITURES BY COMMITTEE ON INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

Mr. O'MAHONEY, from the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 32), which, under the rule, was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

REPORT OF WORK OF COMMITTEE ON EXPENDITURES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, 2 years ago, under the Reorganization Act, the scope of the work of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments was very much broadened. During the past 2 years it has been my privilege to be chairman of that committee. It has been a very happy privilege. I have had a splendid nonpartisan committee with which to work. My last act as chairman of that committee for the Eightieth Congress was to have prepared a report of the work of the first 2 years of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments under the broadened authority given it by the Reorganization Act. The report, unfortunately, was not completed until my term of office as chairman had expired.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the report printed as a Senate document. I understand that the chairman of the Subcommittee on Printing, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], has no objection to the matter being handled in this way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, furthermore I should like to say that, as I have already stated, the relationship which I had with the members of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments has been very satisfactory and pleasant indeed, and I am glad that the chairmanship of that committee is now turned over to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. MCCLELLAN], who has given me the fullest cooperation during the time I was chairman of the committee. I only regret that circumstances do not permit me to remain a member of the committee so that I could give him equally good cooperation on my part.

VOICE OF AMERICA (S. REPT. NO. 2)

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], under authority of the order of the Senate of December 31, 1948, I submit herewith a joint report of a subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and a subcommittee of the Committee on Foreign Relations of their investigation of certain allegations against radio broadcast operations under the Voice of America program.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received and printed.

ORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH—COMMUNICATION FROM HON. HERBERT HOOVER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Honorable Herbert Hoover, chairman of the Joint Committee on the Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government, dealing with reorganization. The communication will be referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the communication printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The communication was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMISSION ON ORGANIZATION OF THE EXECUTIVE BRANCH OF THE GOVERNMENT,
Washington, D. C., January 13, 1949.

The Honorable KENNETH MCKELLAR,
President pro tempore,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR MCKELLAR: The necessity for reorganization of the executive branch of the Government was clearly recognized by the Congress when it created this Commission in July 1947, with the full approval of the President. Congress assigned the Commission the duty of examination and recommendation under the following statement from the act creating the Commission:

"It is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to promote economy, efficiency, and improved service in the transaction of the public business in the departments, bureaus, agencies, boards, commissions, offices, independent establishments, and instrumentalities of the executive branch of the Government by—

"(1) limiting expenditures to the lowest amount consistent with the efficient performance of essential services, activities, and functions;

"(2) eliminating duplication and overlapping of services, activities, and functions;

"(3) consolidating services, activities, and functions of a similar nature;

"(4) abolishing services, activities, and functions not necessary to the efficient conduct of government; and

"(5) defining and limiting executive functions, services, and activities."

This concern of Congress for economy and efficiency reflects the overwhelming interest of every thoughtful citizen and taxpayer in the land.

The writing and adoption of the Federal Constitution proved that a republic could deliberately analyze its political institutions and redesign its government to meet the demands of the future. The broad pattern that America then selected is sound. Today we must deal with the infinitely more complicated government of the twentieth century. In doing so, we must reorganize the executive branch to give it the simplicity of structure, the unity of purpose, and the clear line of executive authority that was originally intended under the Constitution.

As a result of depression, war, new needs for defense, and our greater responsibilities in the foreign field, the Federal Government has become the most gigantic business on earth. In less than 20 years the number of its civil employees has risen from 570,000 to over 2,100,000. The number of bureaus, sections, services, and units has increased fourfold to over 1,800. Annual expenditures have increased from about $3,600,000,000 to over $42,000,000,000. The national debt per average family has increased from about $500 to about $7,500. Such rapid growth could not take place without causing serious problems. Organizational methods, effective 20 years ago, are no longer applicable. The growth of skills and methods in private organization has long since outmoded many of the methods of the Government.

This Commission has found that the United States is paying heavily for a lack of order, a lack of clear lines of authority and responsibility, and a lack of effective organization in the executive branch. It has found that great improvements can be made in the effectiveness with which the Government can serve the people if its organization and administration is overhauled.

This Commission has been engaged in its task for the last 16 months and is reaching its conclusions only after the most painstaking research. We decided at an early date that we must have the aid of leading and experienced citizens to assist us in making findings of fact and recommendation of remedies. The Commission, therefore, divided its work into functional and departmental segments; it created 24 "task forces" with authority to engage such research aid as they might require. About 300 outstanding men and women, expert and experienced in the fields to which they were assigned, have now submitted to us their findings and recommendations. Thanks are due them. They brought great talent and diligence to their work. Their findings will be found useful by the Congress and the executive branch in solution of the problems considered.

Some of the recommendations contained in the volumes of our report, which we plan to file from time to time between now and the expiration of the life of the Commission, can be put into effect only by legislation. Others can be accomplished by executive action. But many of the most important can probably be accomplished only if the Congress reenacts and broadens the power to initiate reorganization plans which it had previously granted to the President under an act which expired on March 31, 1948.

The Commission recommends that such authority should be given to the President and that the power of the President to prepare and transmit plans of reorganization to the Congress should not be restricted by limitations or exemptions. Once the limiting and exempting process is begun it will end the possibility of achieving really substantial results.

But, in saying this, the Commission should not be understood as giving sweeping endorsement to any and all reorganization plans. It does believe that the safeguard against unwise reorganization plans lies both in a sound exercise of the President's discretion and in the reserved power in the Congress by concurrent resolution to disapprove any proposed plan.

Limitations or exemptions upon this power to reorganize should not be imposed other than that of congressional disapproval. They have arisen in the past chiefly in connection with the regulatory commissions. In one of its reports the Commission will discuss these regulatory commissions in detail. It will point out in each case those regulatory functions which it is believed should continue to be performed independently. The Commission will also point out certain other functions which are of a different nature and which can be more efficiently and economically performed by purely executive officials. The inclusion in a reorganization act of provisions exempting certain agencies from its terms would prevent changes which are in accord with established principles in this field and which in no way impair the maintenance of independence and impartiality in the exercise of the great regulatory functions.

Similarly, the inclusion of general language, like that contained in section 5 (a) (6) of the Reorganization Act of 1945,[1] intended to prevent the submission of any plan which imposes limitations upon the independent exercise of quasi-legislative or quasi-judicial functions, would, in the Commission's judgment, be unwise. The phrases are extremely vague and of uncertain meaning. Ingenious and plausible arguments can be made to apply them to a wide range of functions which should clearly be subject to reorganization procedure. Such arguments would not be matters of purely theoretical concern or legislative debates, for the validity of reorganization could be made the subject of protracted litigation by private interests resisting the acts of a reorganized agency on the ground that it was illegally constituted. It might take several years of litigation to lay down interpretations of these general phrases and, even then, uncertainty would remain.

The Commission, in accordance with the act of Congress creating it, as amended, will file its report in a series of parts or volumes, the last of which will be delivered within 70 days of the organization of the Eighty-first Congress. These reports will contain its findings and recommendations. They will begin with the top organization and structure of the executive branch and proceed through the services which are common to the whole executive branch to the reorganizations recommended for particular agencies and groups of agencies.

Yours faithfully,

HERBERT HOOVER,
Chairman.

[1] SEC. 5. (a) No reorganization plan shall provide for, and no reorganization under this act shall have the effect of * * * (6) imposing, in connection with the exercise of any quasi-judicial or quasi-legislative function possessed by an independent agency, any greater limitation upon the exercise of independent judgment and discretion, to the full extent authorized by law, in the carrying out of such function, than existed with respect to the exercise of such function by the agency in which it was vested prior to the taking effect of such reorganization; except that this prohibition shall not prevent the abolition of any such function.

NATIONAL SCIENCE FOUNDATION BILL—ADDITIONAL SPONSOR

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, through some error the name of the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] was left off as a sponsor of Senate bill 247, the so-called National Science Foundation bill. The Senator from Washington has had his name on similar bills from the beginning, and I am very sorry that the mistake was made. I ask unanimous consent that his name be added as a sponsor to the National Science Foundation bill to which I have referred.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DISPLACED PERSONS ACT AMENDMENTS—ADDITIONAL SPONSOR

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. President, on January 5, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON], the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], and I introduced certain amendments to the Displaced Persons Act. These bills were S. 98, S. 99, and S. 100.

Entirely through an inadvertency, the name of the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] was omitted from these amendments. I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD show that the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] was one of the cosponsors of this proposed legislation, and that his name appear on the amendments.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wish to state that the name of the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES] was inadvertently omitted from the list of sponsors of the three amendments to the Displaced Persons Act; and I join in the request of the able Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] in that regard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the correction will be made, and the name of the Senator from New York will be added to the bill as a sponsor.

LOSSES OF FARMERS IN COMPUTING INCOME TAXES

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill which is designed to permit farmers to carry over and carry back net operating losses for 8 years for income-tax purposes. At the present time the farmer is being discriminated against. He may have had a loss in 1 year or 2 years or 3 years, and yet if he happens to have a good crop and receives a good price he has to pay an enormous income tax without having the privilege that business has, to deduct for losses incurred during a certain period of years. In order to equalize the tax burden and to treat the farmer in the same way that all other businessmen are treated, I have introduced the bill, and I call it particularly to the attention of the Finance Committee.

The bill (S. 359) to permit farmers to carry over and carry back net operating losses for 8 years for income tax purposes, introduced by Mr. LANGER (for himself and Mr. TAYLOR), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

ADDITIONAL JUDGES OF MUNICIPAL COURT FOR THE DISTRICT

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to authorize the appointment of three additional judges of the municipal court for the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill prepared by me be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from South Carolina will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 333) to authorize the appointment of three additional judges of the municipal court for the District of Columbia and prescribe the qualifications of the judges of such court, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The explanatory statement presented by Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina is as follows:

STATEMENT BY MR. JOHNSTON OF SOUTH CAROLINA

EXPLANATION OF BILL TO AUTHORIZE THE APPOINTMENT OF THREE ADDITIONAL JUDGES OF THE MUNICIPAL COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA AND PRESCRIBE THE QUALIFICATIONS OF THE JUDGES OF SUCH COURT

The primary purpose of this bill is to create three new judgeships on the municipal court for the District of Columbia.

The municipal court of the District of Columbia is at present greatly overworked, is running behind on its docket, and has no prospect except to run further behind, unless additional judges are provided. The court has not been increased in membership in recent years, in spite of a great increase in the population of the District of Columbia.

This is an important court, and litigants are entitled to the speedy justice which can only be provided when there are enough judges to handle expeditiously all cases filed.

It is important to note that this court has a net income of over $1,000,000 per year, which is paid into the general fund of the District of Columbia. Therefore, the proposal to increase the number of judges for the court is not one which will require any expenditure of the revenues of the United States.

A further purpose of this bill is to more adequately prescribe the qualifications of appointees to the municipal court for the District of Columbia.

At the present time, authority exists for the appointment of 2 of the 10 judges, now authorized for this court, from among nonresidents of the District of Columbia. As a matter of fact, all 10 of the present judges are residents of the District.

This bill would, in effect, require that 11 of the 13 judges of the court, which it would authorize, should be bona fide residents of the District of Columbia, and shall (except in the case of an appointee who shall have been a judge of one of the courts of the District of Columbia) have maintained an actual place of abode within the District for not less than 5 years immediately prior to appointment, and shall, during such 5-year period, have been actively engaged in the private practice of the law in the District of Columbia, maintaining an office in the District for the purposes of such practice, and devoting a major portion of working time to such practice and deriving the principal portion of income from such practice.

The bill would provide that service during the present emergency in the armed forces of the United States shall be included in the computation of the 5-year requirements specified.

Not more than 2 of the 13 judges which would be authorized under this bill might be either (1) a nonresident of the District of Columbia who shall have been for at least 5 years prior to appointment a member of the bar of the highest court in the State in which he has been domiciled, and who is a member of the bar of the District of Columbia, or (2) a member of the bar of the District of Columbia, for at least 5 years prior to appointment, who has been employed as an attorney in the District of Columbia in either the Government of the United States or the government of the District of Columbia. In applying this provision, members of the present court would be disregarded. The bill requires that in making appointments to the three additional vacancies authorized, at least one person shall be appointed from the classes mentioned in this paragraph.

Section 3 of the bill contains the technical provisions necessary to make available for the payment of the proposed new judges moneys appropriated for the government of the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949.

A similar bill was considered and passed by the Senate in the Seventy-ninth Congress. Although the bill was reported favorably by the House Committee on the District of Columbia, it was not acted upon by the House and failed to become law.

EXTENSION OF RENT CONTROL

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill providing for the extension of rent control to June 30, 1951. I ask unanimous consent that a statement I am issuing on this bill be printed at this point in the RECORD, as well as an analysis of the bill, and I ask that these be followed in the RECORD by the printing of the bill itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be appropriately referred, and, without objection, the bill together with the statement and analysis of the Senator from Pennsylvania will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 434) to continue rent control until June 30, 1951, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MYERS was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Housing and Rent Act of 1949."

SEC. 2. The provisions of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, are amended by inserting the following immediately preceding Title I—Amendments to Existing Law.

"DECLARATION OF PURPOSES

"This act is hereby declared to be in the interest of the national defense and security and necessary to the successful completion of the present war. The Congress recognizes that an emergency exists with regard to housing accommodations due to the acute shortage of all types of housing and especially rental housing.

"The purposes of this act are, during the transition period from war to peace, to stabilize rents for housing accommodations and to prevent speculative, unwarranted, and abnormal increases in rents for such accommodations; to prevent unwarranted evictions because they would cause grave hardships to tenants and because unlimited evictions would render it extremely difficult to control rents; to protect persons with relatively fixed and limited incomes, consumers, wage earners, and veterans and other persons dependent upon life insurance, annuities, pensions, and allowances granted to veterans attending school or learning trades, from undue impairment of their standard of living; to prevent the disruption of production due to the inability of employees to find adequate housing; and to assist veterans to obtain adequate housing for themselves and their families."

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO TITLE I OF HOUSING AND RENT ACT OF 1947, AS AMENDED

SEC. 3. Section 4 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out "April 1, 1949" wherever such date appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1951."

SEC. 203. Section 202 (d) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

SEC. 204. Section 202 (e) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

SEC. 205. Section 202 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by adding the following new subsections at the end thereof:

"(f) The term 'maximum rent' means the maximum lawful rent for the use of defense-area housing accommodations.

"(b) On the termination of rent control under this title all records and other data (the cabinets or containers holding such records and data) used or held in connection with the establishment and maintenance of maximum rents by the Housing Expediter, and all predecessor agencies, shall, on request be delivered without reimbursement to the proper officials of any State or local subdivision of government that may be charged with the duty of administering a rent-control program in any State or local subdivision of government to which such records and data may be applicable: Provided, however, That any such records or data (and the cabinets or containers holding such records or data) shall be so made available subject to recall for use in carrying out the purpose of this title."

SEC. 207. (a) Section 204 (a) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out "March 31, 1949" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1951".

(b) Section 204 (b) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(b) During the period from the effective date of the Housing and Rent Act of 1949 and ending on the date this act ceases to be in effect, the maximum rent for controlled housing accommodations, unless and until changed by the Housing Expediter in accordance with paragraph (5) of this subsection, shall be the rents fixed by the Housing Expediter determined as follows:

"(1) For housing accommodations for which a maximum rent was in effect on March 31, 1949, the maximum rent shall continue to be such maximum rent;

"(2) For housing accommodations not included within the definition of 'controlled housing accommodations' as this definition read prior to the effective date of the Housing and Rent Act of 1949, the maximum rent shall be the higher of (a) the rent generally prevailing in the defense-rental area for comparable accommodations on the maximum rent date for such area, plus due allowance, where new construction is involved, for general increases in the cost of construction in the area from 1939 until the date the construction is or was completed; (b) the maximum rent last in effect for such housing accommodations under Federal rent control;

"(3) For housing accommodations which were exempt from control pursuant to the second proviso of section 204 (b) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947 as section 204 (b) read prior to amendment by the Housing and Rent Act of 1948, and for housing accommodations which were exempt from control pursuant to section 204 (b) (2) and (3) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, as section 204 (b) (2) and (3) read prior to the effective date of the Housing and Rent Act of 1949, the maximum rent shall be the rent established for such housing accommodations by such lease;

"(4) For housing accommodations recontrolled pursuant to the provisions of this act, as amended, the maximum rent shall be the maximum rent established by the Housing Expediter in the order or regulation of control;

"(5) The Housing Expediter may by regulation or order, make such adjustments in the maximum rents established under paragraphs (1), (2), (3), and (4) of this subsection (b) as may be necessary to carry out the purposes and provisions of this act, as amended."

(c) Section 204 (c) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) Whenever in the judgment of the Housing Expediter such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, he shall issue a declaration setting forth the necessity for, and recommendations with reference to, the stabilization or reduction of rents for any defense-area housing accommodations within a particular defense-rental area. If within 60 days after the issuance of any such recommendations rents for any such accommodations within such defense-rental area have not in the judgment of the Housing Expediter been stabilized or reduced by State or local regulations, or otherwise, in accordance with the recommendations, the Housing Expediter may by regulation or order establish such maximum rents for such accommodations as in his judgment will be generally fair and equitable and will effectuate the purposes of this act. So far as practicable, in establishing any maximum rent for any defense-area housing accommodations, the Housing Expediter shall ascertain and give due consideration to the rents prevailing for such accommodations, or comparable accommodations, on or about April 1, 1941 (or if, prior or subsequent to April 1, 1941, defense activities shall have resulted or threatened to result in increases in rents for housing accommodations in such area inconsistent with the purposes of this act, then on or about a date not earlier than April 1, 1940), which in the judgment of the Housing Expediter, does not reflect such increases, and he shall make adjustments for such relevant factors as he may determine and deem to be of general applicability in respect of such accommodations, including increases or decreases in property taxes and other costs within such defense-rental area. In designating defense-rental areas, in prescribing regulations and orders establishing maximum rents for such accommodations, and in selecting persons to administer such regulations and orders, the Housing Expediter shall, to such extent as he deems to be practicable, consider any recommendations which may be made by State and local officials concerned with housing or rental conditions in any defense-rental area. Whenever the Housing Expediter shall find that, in any defense-rental area or any portion thereof specified by him, the availability of adequate rental housing accommodations and other relevant factors are such as to make rent control unnecessary for the purpose of eliminating speculative, unwarranted, and abnormal increase in rents and of preventing profiteering, and speculative and other disruptive practices resulting from abnormal market conditions caused by congestion, the controls imposed upon rents by authority of this act in such defense-rental area or portion thereof shall be forthwith abolished; but whenever in the judgment of the Housing Expediter it is necessary or proper, in order to effectuate the purpose of this act, to reestablish the regulation of rents in any such defense-rental area or portion thereof, he may forthwith by regulation or order reestablish maximum rents for housing accommodations therein in accordance with the standards set forth in this act. Before issuing any regulation or order of general applicability under the foregoing provisions of this subsection, the Housing Expediter shall, so far as practicable, advise and consult with a national advisory committee composed of 15 members to be appointed by him which is representative of both landlord and tenant interests and of the general public."

(d) Section 204 (d) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The Housing Expediter is authorized to issue such regulations and orders as he may deem necessary to carry out the provision of this act. Any regulation or order under this section may be established in such form and manner, may contain such classifications and differentiations, and may provide for such adjustments and reasonable exceptions, as in the judgment of the Housing Expediter are necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, as amended. Any regulation or order under this act which establishes a maximum rent may provide for a maximum rent below the rent or rents prevailing for the defense-area housing accommodations, at the time of the issuance of such regulation or order. Regulations, orders, and requirements under this act, as amended, may contain such provisions as the Housing Expediter deems necessary to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof. The powers granted in this section shall not be used or made to operate to compel changes in established rental practice, except where such action is affirmatively found by the Housing Expediter to be necessary to prevent circumvention or evasion of any regulation, order, or requirement under this act, as amended."

(e) Section 204 (e) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(e) (1) The Housing Expediter is authorized and directed to create in each defense-rental area, or such portion thereof as he may designate, a local advisory board, each such board to consist of not less than five members who are citizens of the area and who, insofar as practicable, are, as a group, representative of the affected interests in the area, to be appointed by the Housing Expediter from recommendations made by the respective governors: Provided, That in any case where the governor has made no recommendations for original appointments to local boards or appointments to fill vacancies, within 30 days after request therefor (subsequent to March 31, 1949) from the Housing Expediter, the Housing Expediter shall without such recommendations appoint the original members of such boards or such members as may be required to fill vacancies. The Housing Expediter shall immediately subsequent to March 31, 1949, screen the membership of the boards to determine if their membership complies with the standards set forth in this section and shall promptly take steps to effectuate any change in the membership of any board necessitated by this provision.

"(2) The Housing Expediter shall furnish the local advisory boards suitable office space and stenographic assistance and shall make available to such boards any records and other information in the possession of the Housing Expediter with respect to the establishment and maintenance of maximum rents for housing accommodations in the respective defense-rental area which may be requested by such boards.

"(3) The local advisory boards shall have the following functions: (a) to make recommendations to the Housing Expediter with respect to the decontrol of the defense-rental area or any portion thereof; (b) to make recommendations to the Housing Expediter with respect to the adequacy of the general rent level in the area; (c) to make recommendations with respect to the operations generally of the area rent office; (d) to exercise such functions for educational, administrative, and compliance purposes as are delegated by the Housing Expediter.

"(4) The Housing Expediter on receipt of a recommendation from a local advisory board shall give full and careful consideration to such recommendation and to any data accompanying it, but the responsibility for deciding any matter so presented shall rest solely with the Housing Expediter. Within a reasonable time after receipt of any recommendation from a local advisory board concerning a general rent increase or the decontrol of housing accommodations, the Housing Expediter shall approve or disapprove such recommendations by issuing an appropriate order or amendment to his regulations accompanied by a statement of the grounds upon which his decision is based and any economic data and other facts of which he has taken official notice."

(f) Section 204 (f) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"(f) The provisions of this title shall cease to be in effect at the close of June 30, 1951."

(g) Section 204 (g) of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 208. Section 205 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by striking out from the heading of such section the words "by tenants"; and by changing the period at the end of the sentence, "Suit to recover such amount may be brought in any Federal, State, or Territorial court of competent jurisdiction within 1 year after the date of such violation" to a colon and inserting: "Provided, That if the person from whom such payment is demanded, accepted, or received, either fails to institute an action under this subsection within 30 days from the date of the occurrence of the violation or is not entitled for any reason to bring the action, the Housing Expediter may institute such action on behalf of the United States within such 1-year period. If such action is instituted by the Housing Expediter, the person from whom such payment is demanded, accepted, or received shall thereafter be barred from bringing an action for the same violation or violations."

SEC. 209. Section 206 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 206 (a) It shall be unlawful for any person to demand, accept, or receive any rent for the use or occupancy of any controlled housing accommodations in excess of the maximum rent prescribed under section 204, or otherwise to do or omit to do any act, in violation of this act, or of any regulation or order or requirement under this act, or to offer, solicit, attempt, or agree to do any of the foregoing.

"(b) Whenever in the judgment of the Housing Expediter any person has been engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this act, or any regulation or order issued thereunder, he may make application to the appropriate court for an order enjoining such acts or practices, or for an order enforcing compliance with such provision, and upon a showing by the Housing Expediter that such person has engaged or is about to engage in any such acts or practices a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond.

"(c) Any person who willfully violates any provision of this act, or any regulation or order issued thereunder, and any person who makes any statement or entry false in any material respect in any document or report required to be kept or filed under this act, shall, upon conviction thereof, be subject to a fine of not more than $5,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or to both such fine and imprisonment. Whenever the Housing Expediter has reason to believe that any person is liable for punishment under this subsection, he may certify the facts to the Attorney General, who may, in his discretion, cause appropriate proceedings to be brought.

"(d) The district courts shall have jurisdiction of criminal proceedings for violations of this act, or any regulation or order issued thereunder, and concurrently with State and Territorial courts, of all other proceedings under section 205 and subsection (b) of this section. Such criminal proceedings may be brought in any district in which any part of any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred. Such other proceedings may be brought in any district in which any part of any act or transaction constituting the violation occurred, or may be brought in the district in which the defendant resides or transacts business, and process in such cases may be served in any district wherein the defendant resides or transacts business or wherever the defendant may be found. Any such court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of any criminal or other proceedings brought before it under this section. No costs shall be assessed against the Housing Expediter or the United States Government in any proceeding under this act.

"(e) No person shall be liable for damages or penalties in any Federal, State, or Territorial court, on any grounds for or in respect of anything done or omitted to be done in good faith pursuant to any provision of this act or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder notwithstanding that subsequently such provision, regulation, order, or requirement may be modified, rescinded, or determined to be invalid. In any suit or action wherein a party relies for ground of relief or defense upon this act or any regulation, order, or requirement thereunder, the court having jurisdiction of such suit or action shall certify such fact to the Housing Expediter. The Housing Expediter may intervene in any such suit or action.

"(f) The principal office of the Housing Expediter shall be in the District of Columbia, but he or any duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of his powers in any place, and attorneys appointed by the Housing Expediter may appear for and represent the Housing Expediter in any case in any court.

"(g) The Housing Expediter is authorized to make such studies and investigations, to conduct such hearings, and to obtain such information as he deems necessary or proper to assist him in prescribing any regulation or order under this act, or in the administration and enforcement of this act and regulations thereunder.

"(h) The Housing Expediter is further authorized by regulation or order, to require any person who rents or offers for rent or acts as broker or agent for the rental of any housing accommodations, to furnish any such information under oath or affirmation or otherwise, to make and keep records and other documents and to make reports, and he may require any such person to permit the inspection and copying of records and other documents, and the inspection of defense-area housing accommodations. The Housing Expediter may administer oaths and affirmations and may, whenever necessary by subpena require any such person to appear and testify or to appear and produce documents or both at any designated place.

"(i) For the purpose of obtaining any information under subsection (g), the Housing Expediter may by subpena require any other person to appear and testify or to appear and produce documents, or both, at any designated place.

"(j) The production of a person's documents at any place other than his place of business shall not be required under this section in any case in which, prior to the return date specified in the subpena issued in respect thereto, such person either has furnished the Housing Expediter with a copy of such documents (certified by such person under oath to be a true and correct copy), or has entered into a stipulation with the Housing Expediter as to the information contained in such documents.

"(k) In case of contumacy by, or refusal to obey a subpena served upon, any person referred to in subsection (i), the district court for any district in which such person is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the Housing Expediter, shall have jurisdiction to issue an order requiring such person to appear and give testimony or to appear and produce documents, or both; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof. The provisions of this subsection shall also apply to any person referred to in subsection (h).

"(l) Witnesses subpenaed under this section shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

"(m) No person shall be excused from complying with any requirement under this section because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (U. S. C., 1935 ed., title 49, sec. 46), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege.

"(n) The Housing Expediter shall not publish or disclose any information obtained under this act that such Housing Expediter deems confidential or with reference to which a request for confidential treatment is made by the person furnishing such information unless he determines that the withholding thereof is contrary to the public interest.

"(o) Any person subpenaed under this section shall have the right to make a record of this testimony and be represented by counsel."

SEC. 210. Section 208 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(c) The Housing Expediter may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such employees as he deems necessary in order to carry out his functions and duties under this act, as amended, and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Housing Expediter may utilize the services of Federal, State, and local agencies and may utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services as may from time to time be needed. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Office of the Housing Expediter no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency."

SEC. 211. Section 209 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 209. Whenever in the judgment of the Housing Expediter such action is necessary or proper in order to effectuate the purposes of this act, he may, by regulation or order, regulate or prohibit speculative or manipulative practices or renting or leasing practices (including practices relating to recovery of the possession) in connection with any defense-area housing accommodations, which in his judgment are equivalent to or are likely to result in rent increases inconsistent with the purposes of this act."

SEC. 212. Section 211 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 211. The provisions of this act shall be applicable to the several States and to the Territories and possessions of the United States and the District of Columbia."

SEC. 213. Title II of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended, is amended by adding the following new sections at the end thereof:

"SEC. 214. (a) At any time after the issuance of any regulation, amendment to regulation, or order under section 204, any person, including any tenant, affected by any provisions of such regulation, amendment, or order, may, in accordance with regulations to be prescribed by the Housing Expediter, file a protest specifically setting forth objections to any such provision and affidavits or other written evidence in support of such objections. Statements in support of any such regulation or order may be received and incorporated in the transcript of the proceedings at such times and in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Housing Expediter. Within a reasonable time after the filing of any protest under this subsection, but in no event more than 30 days after such filing, the Housing Expediter shall either grant or deny such protest in whole or in part, notice such protest for hearing, or provide an opportunity to present further evidence in connection therewith. In the event that the Housing Expediter denies any such protest in whole or in part, he shall inform the protestant of the grounds upon which such decision is based, and of any economic data and other facts of which the Housing Expediter has taken official notice.

"(b) In the administration of this act, the Housing Expediter may take official notice of economic data and other facts, including facts found by him as a result of action taken under subsections (g) to (m) of section 206 of this act.

"(c) Any proceedings under this section may be limited by the Housing Expediter to the filing of affidavits, or other written evidence, and the filing of briefs.

"(d) Any protest filed under this section shall be granted or denied by the Housing Expediter, or granted in part and the remainder of it denied, within a reasonable time after it is filed. Any protestant who is aggrieved by undue delay on the part of the Housing Expediter in disposing of his protest may petition the Emergency Court of Appeals for relief; and such court shall have jurisdiction by appropriate order to require the Housing Expediter to dispose of such protest within such time as may be fixed by the court. If the Housing Expediter does not act finally within the time fixed by the court, the protest shall be deemed to be denied at the expiration of that period.

"(e) Any person who is aggrieved by the denial or partial denial of his protest may, within 30 days after such denial, file a complaint with the Emergency Court of Appeals, specifying his objections and praying that the regulation or order protested be enjoined or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such complaint shall forthwith be served on the Housing Expediter, who shall certify and file with such court a transcript of such portions of the proceedings in connection with the protest as are material under the complaint. Such transcript shall include a statement setting forth, so far as practicable, the economic data and other facts of which the Housing Expediter has taken official notice. Upon the filing of such complaint the court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to set aside such regulation or order, in whole or in part, to dismiss the complaint, or to remand the proceeding: Provided, That the regulation or order may be modified or rescinded by the Housing Expediter at any time notwithstanding the pendency of such complaint. No objection to such regulation or order, and no evidence in support of any objection thereto, shall be considered by the court, unless such objection shall have been set forth by the complainant in the protest or such evidence shall be contained in the transcript. If application is made to the court by either party for leave to introduce additional evidence which was either offered to the Housing Expediter and not admitted, or which could not reasonably have been offered to the Housing Expediter or included by the Housing Expediter in such proceedings, and the court determines that such evidence should be admitted, the court shall order the evidence to be presented to the Housing Expediter. The Housing Expediter shall promptly receive the same, and such other evidence as he deems necessary or proper, and thereupon he shall certify and file with the court a transcript thereof and any modification made in the regulation or order as a result thereof; except that on request by the Housing Expediter, any such evidence shall be presented directly to the court.

"(f) No such regulation or order shall be enjoined or set aside, in whole or in part, unless the complainant establishes to the satisfaction of the court that the regulation or order is not in accordance with law, or is arbitrary or capricious. The effectiveness of a judgment of the court in enjoining or setting aside, in whole or in part, any such regulation or order, shall be postponed until the expiration of 30 days from the entry thereof, except that if a petition for a writ of certiorari is filed with the Supreme Court under subsection (g) within such 30 days, effectiveness of such judgment shall be postponed until an order of the Supreme Court denying such petition becomes final, or until other final disposition of the case by the Supreme Court.

"(g) Within 30 days after entry of a judgment or order, interlocutory or final, by the Emergency Court of Appeals, a petition for a writ of certiorari may be filed in the Supreme Court of the United States, and thereupon the judgment or order shall be subject to review by the Supreme Court in the same manner as a judgment of a circuit court of appeals as provided in section 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 28, sec. 347). The Supreme Court shall advance on the docket and expedite the disposition of all causes filed therein pursuant to this subsection. The Emergency Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court upon review of judgments and orders of the Emergency Court of Appeals, shall have exclusive jurisdiction to determine the validity of any regulation or order issued under section 204, and of any provision of any such regulation or order. Except as provided in this section, no court, Federal, State, or Territorial, shall have jurisdiction or power to consider the validity of any such regulation or order, or to stay, restrain, enjoin, or set aside, in whole or in part, any provision of this act authorizing the issuance of such regulations or orders, or any provision of any such regulation or order, or to restrain or enjoin the enforcement of any such provision.

"(h) (1) Within 30 days after arraignment, or such additional time as the court may allow for good cause shown, in any criminal proceeding, and within 5 days after judgment in any civil or criminal proceeding, brought pursuant to section 205 or section 206 of this act or section 37 of the Criminal Code, involving alleged violation of any provision of any regulation or order issued under section 204, except a regulation or order issued in connection with any recommendation of a local advisory board, the defendant may apply to the court in which the proceeding is pending for leave to file in the Emergency Court of Appeals a complaint against the Housing Expediter setting forth objections to the validity of any provision which the defendant is alleged to have violated or conspired to violate. The court in which the proceeding is pending shall grant such leave with respect to any objection which it finds is made in good faith and with respect to which it finds there is reasonable and substantial excuse for the defendant's failure to present such objection in a protest filed in accordance with subsection (a) of this section. Upon the filing of a complaint pursuant to and within 30 days from the granting of such leave, the Emergency Court of Appeals shall have jurisdiction to enjoin or set aside in whole or in part the provision of the regulation or order complained of or to dismiss the complaint. The court may authorize the introduction of evidence, either to the Housing Expediter or directly to the court, in accordance with subsection (e) of this section. The provisions of subsections (f) and (g) of this section shall be applicable with respect to any proceeding instituted in accordance with this subsection.

"(2) In any proceeding brought pursuant to section 205 or section 206 of this act or section 37 of the Criminal Code, involving an alleged violation of any provision of any such regulation or order, the court shall stay the proceeding—

"(i) during the period within which a complaint may be filed in the Emergency Court of Appeals pursuant to leave granted under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision;

"(ii) during the pendency of any protest properly filed by the defendant under subsection (a) of this section prior to the institution of the proceeding under section 205 or section 206 of this act, or section 37 of the Criminal Code, setting forth objections to validity of such provision which the court finds to have been made in good faith; and

"(iii) during the pendency of any judicial proceeding instituted by the defendant under this section with respect to such protest or instituted by the defendant under paragraph (1) of this subsection with respect to such provision, and until the expiration of the time allowed in this section for the taking of further proceedings with respect thereto. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, stays shall be granted thereunder in civil proceedings only after judgment and upon application made within 5 days after judgment. Notwithstanding the provisions of this paragraph, in the case of a proceeding under section 206 (b) of this act, as amended, the court granting a stay under this paragraph shall issue a temporary injunction or restraining order enjoining or restraining, during the period of the stay, violations by the defendant of any provision of the regulation or order involved in the proceeding. If any provision of a regulation or order is determined to be invalid by judgment of the Emergency Court of Appeals, which has become effective in accordance with subsection (f) of this section any proceedings pending in any court shall be dismissed, and any judgment in such proceeding vacated, to the extent that such proceeding or judgment is based upon violation of such provision. Except as provided in this subsection, the pendency of any protest under subsection (a) of this section, or judicial proceeding under this section, shall not be grounds for staying any proceeding brought pursuant to section 205 or section 206 of this act or section 37 of the Criminal Code; nor except as provided in this subsection, shall any retroactive effect be given any judgment setting aside a provision of a regulation or order issued under section 204.

"SEC. 215. Nothing in this act shall be construed to require any person to offer any housing accommodations for rent: Provided, however, That the Housing Expediter may provide reasonable restrictions on evictions to prevent circumvention or evasion of this act."

"SEC. 216. The provisions of this act, and all regulations, orders, and requirements thereunder, shall terminate on June 30, 1951, or upon the date of a proclamation by the President, or upon the date specified in a concurrent resolution by the two Houses of the Congress declaring that the further continuance of the authority granted by this act is not necessary in the interest of the national defense and security, whichever date is the earlier; except that as to offenses committed, or rights or liabilities incurred, prior to such termination date, the provisions of this act and such regulations, orders, and requirements shall be treated as still remaining in force for the purpose of sustaining any proper suit, action, or prosecution with respect to any such right, liability, or offense."

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 301. If any provision of this act of the application of such provision to any person or circumstances shall be held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the act, and the applicability of such provision to other persons or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 302. This act shall become effective on the first day of the first calendar month following the month in which it is enacted.

The statement and an analysis presented by Mr. MYERS were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR FRANCIS J. MYERS, OF PENNSYLVANIA, ON INTRODUCING NEW RENT CONTROL BILL, JANUARY 13, 1949

I am introducing today a bill to extend rent control until June 30, 1951, and to close most of the loopholes on effective regulation opened up by action of the Eightieth Congress in 1947 and 1948.

The most unfair thing about rent control as it now operates is that numerous property owners, as a result of one or another of the provisions in the present act, have been able to get out from under rent control and to charge their tenants whatever the traffic will bear, while the great mass of landlords are held rigidly under control. The answer to this inequity is not to turn all rental property loose, but to regulate all property owners in the same way.

Although this bill will strengthen rent control materially, it is not designed to eliminate present procedures under which hundreds of thousands of landlords have been able legally to obtain individual upward rent adjustments for their properties on the basis of increased operating costs, repairs or improvements, higher taxes or utility costs, or for a variety of similar reasons.

The intent in the bill is to close the avenues to chiseling, arbitrary evictions, gray-market practices in renting vacant properties, widespread violations of the law, and other slick tricks used by a small minority of landlords whose practices seriously undermine the whole rent-control program and spread insecurity and fear among tenants.

The Republican Eightieth Congress twice enacted rent-control laws which were essentially decontrol laws. From year to year, the Republican majority in that Congress indicated that each new rent control act would probably be the last one. The continuing housing shortage demonstrates how unrealistic that approach was. Unless we are satisfied to see wholesale suffering among the American people through rent inflation, we must not only continue rent control but bring it more into line with the realities of the housing shortage.

I intend to seek early hearings by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee on this legislation which, I am sure, will receive sympathetic attention from a Congress elected to put the brakes on inflation.

MAIN PROVISIONS OF BILL

In general outline, the bill would restore rent control pretty much to the status it held prior to the enactment of the 1947 and 1948 acts. It sets up the machinery to recontrol all types of housing accommodations in defense-rental areas, with the exception of motor courts and trailers or trailer spaces and of transient accommodations in hotels and tourist homes. Thus, new construction, conversions, property previously owner-occupied, permanent hotel accommodations, including the so-called apartment hotels, would be recontrolled.

Authority would be provided for the control or recontrol of any areas not now under rent control.

No new 15 percent increase leases would be permitted, but those leases now in effect would continue and properties on which such leases had been negotiated would be continued at the higher ceiling.

Authority to regulate evictions would be returned to the Federal Government. Criminal powers against violators would be restored to the expediter. Also, the right of the expediter to sue for triple damages would be restored.

The act would be continued until June 30, 1951.

Both tenants and landlords would be given the right to appeal from regulations and decisions of the Housing Expediter.

The local boards would be continued, with certain safeguards as to their degree of representativeness, but the act would make it clear that their powers are advisory only. The Housing Expediter would be required to act publicly on every recommendation of these boards and to state his reasons and supporting data for approving or rejecting such recommendations.

A national advisory committee of 15 members representing landlords, tenants, and the general public would be set up to work with and advise the Housing Expediter.

The District of Columbia, for the first time, would be covered into the national law and uniform standards would thus be set up, particularly as regards the so-called cooperatives racket.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF BILL

Section 1 provides that the act may be cited as the "Housing and Rent Act of 1949."

Section 2 adds a new declaration of purposes.

Section 3 provides for the continuance to June 30, 1951, of the veterans' preference provisions in section 4 of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947, as amended.

TITLE II—MAXIMUM RENTS

Section 201 repeals the declaration of policy in the present law which emphasized congressional intent to decontrol rents speedily.

Section 202 defines "controlled housing accommodations," including thereunder all types of housing accommodations in defense-rental areas except transient quarters in hotels, in tourist homes, and also any motor courts and trailers or trailer space.

Section 203 redefines "defense-rental area" in such a way as to permit once again extension of control to new areas and the recontrol of any areas which have been decontrolled.

Section 204 redefines "rent."

Section 205 adds definitions of "maximum rent," "defense-area housing accommodations," "documents," and "district court."

Section 206 provides for the delivery without reimbursement of the cabinets containing rent control records, as well as the records themselves, to local officials on the termination of national rent control.

Section 207 (a) extends the Office of the Housing Expediter to the close of June 30, 1951.

Section 207 (b) sets up standards for the establishment of maximum rents over recontrolled housing units, including due allowance, where new construction is involved, for general increases in the cost of construction; it continues present rent ceilings for housing covered by the 15-percent voluntary leases, and provides authority generally for the Expediter to set rents on any recontrolled housing which was at some time decontrolled under the 15-percent lease provision.

Section 207 (c) revises the machinery for control of new areas and decontrol of areas substantially along the lines of the original Emergency Price Control Act and further provides for the appointment of a national advisory committee composed of 15 members representative of both landlord and tenant interests and of the general public to advise and consult with the Housing Expediter under this subsection.

Section 207 (d) authorizes the issuance of regulations and adjustments to carry out the purposes of the act.

Section 207 (e) applies to the local advisory boards. It sets up standards for the appointment of the members. It limits their status to an advisory one only. It limits their recommendations to matters of area decontrol, adequacy of area general rent level, and operations of local rent offices and the exercise of "such functions for educational, administrative, and compliance purposes as are delegated by the Housing Expediter." Full authority for passing on any recommendations of a local board rests with the Expediter. However, he must approve or disapprove such recommendation within a reasonable time and give a statement of the grounds upon which his decision is based and any economic data or other facts of which he has taken official notice.

Section 207 (f) extends the provisions of title II having to do with maximum rents to the close of June 30, 1951.

Section 207 (g) repeals present prohibitions against the Housing Expediter's regulating the practice of requiring security deposits from tenants.

Section 208 provides for treble damage suits to be instituted by the Housing Expediter, restoring powers which he previously held.

Section 209 provides for criminal sanctions and the use of the administrative subpena by the Housing Expediter, restoring powers which he previously held.

Section 210 provides for standards for employment in the Office of the Housing Expediter.

Section 211 restores to the Housing Expediter the power he held prior to the enactment of the Housing and Rent Act of 1947 to regulate evictions.

Section 212 makes the act applicable to the several States and to the Territories and possessions of the United States and to the District of Columbia, which has had a separate law of its own since before the original Price Control Act was passed.

Section 213 provides machinery for review of regulations and orders issued by the Housing Expediter and permits tenants and landlords to appeal to the Expediter and to the Emergency Court of Appeals. (Since recommendations of local boards would be advisory only, there would no longer be automatic appeal to the Emergency Court of Appeals by any local board in case the Expediter should reject a local board recommendation. However, tenants or landlords could appeal.) Section 213 also provides that nothing in this act shall be construed to require any person to offer any housing accommodations for rent; provided, however, that the Housing Expediter may provide reasonable restrictions on evictions to prevent circumvention or evasion of this act. This section also provides that rent control can terminate earlier than June 30, 1951, if Congress should rescind the authority or upon a proclamation by the President that the continuance of this authority is not necessary in the interest of the national defense and security.

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS

Section 301 is the separability clause.

Section 302 provides for the act to become effective on the first day of the first calendar month following the month in which it is enacted.

CLARIFICATION OF SECTION OF NATIONAL SERVICE LIFE INSURANCE ACT

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a bill to clarify the provisions of section 602 (u) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, and I ask unanimous consent that a résumé of the bill, which was recommended by the Veterans' Administration, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the résumé presented by the Senator from Georgia will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 461) to clarify the provisions of section 602 (u) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended, introduced by Mr. GEORGE (by request), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The résumé presented by Mr. GEORGE was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RÉSUMÉ OF PROPOSED BILL RECOMMENDED BY VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

PURPOSE OF BILL

To clarify the provisions of section 602 (u) of the National Service Life Insurance Act of 1940, as amended.

To make it clear that as to insurance maturing on or after August 1, 1946, in cases where the beneficiary could not have elected to receive in a lump-sum settlement, any accrued installments on such insurance not paid to such beneficiary during his lifetime shall be paid to the estate of the insured rather than to the estate of the beneficiary.

The enactment of the proposed bill would not involve any cost and would lessen the probability of future litigation in insurance matters.

NOTE.—The present law provides payment to the estate of the insured:

(1) Where no beneficiary is designated by the insured;

(2) Where the beneficiary does not survive the insured;

(3) Where the designated beneficiary is not entitled to lump-sum payment and survives the insured, the remaining unpaid amounts go to the estate of the insured.

Under existing law payments go to the estate of the beneficiary in cases where the beneficiary is entitled to lump-sum payment, but elects some other mode of settlement and dies before receiving all benefits due and payable, the remaining unpaid amounts go to the estate of the beneficiary and not to the estate of the insured.

A comparison of the proposed bill with existing law, showing changes, is enclosed.

PORTION OF SECTION 602 (U)

[Changed language in brackets. New language in italics]

| Present law | Proposed bill |
|---|---|
| (u) * * *; and in any case in which no beneficiary is designated by the insured, or the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, or a designated beneficiary not entitled to [choose] a lump-sum settlement survives the insured, and dies before receiving all the benefits due and payable, the commuted value of the [insurance remaining unpaid] shall be paid in one sum to the estate of the insured. | (u) * * *; and in any case in which no beneficiary is designated by the insured, or the designated beneficiary does not survive the insured, or a designated beneficiary not entitled to (omits "choose") a lump-sum settlement survives the insured, and dies before receiving all the benefits due and payable, the commuted value of the remaining unpaid insurance (whether accrued or not) shall be paid in one sum to the estate of the insured. |

NATIONAL HOLIDAY ON ELECTION DAY

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. HUMPHREY] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference, a bill providing that national election day be a national holiday, and I ask unanimous consent that an explanatory statement of the bill prepared by me be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement of the Senator from Washington will be printed in the RECORD.

The statement presented by Mr. MAGNUSON was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY WARREN G. MAGNUSON, UNITED STATES SENATOR

NATIONAL ELECTION DAY SHOULD BE A NATIONAL HOLIDAY

Today I am introducing a bill on behalf of myself and the junior Senator from Minnesota, which, if enacted, will make the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November of every even-numbered year a legal holiday. Most of us in the United States Senate are aware of the fact this is national election day. Some of those who were Members of this body last year are also aware of that fact.

This bill, which I hope to see enacted in this first session of the Eighty-first Congress, should have the support of every Senator, Congressman, and citizen who believes in representative government and the democratic process.

July 4 has been designated as Independence Day—to commemorate the vision and achievements of that band of patriots whose action brought forth upon this continent a new Nation. This is as it should be. But certainly the day most closely associated—by concept and purpose—with Independence Day is election day.

At the ballot box every 2 years the electorate of this Nation have the opportunity to exercise the prerogative of a free people. Cumulatively their decisions, on men and issues, determine the social and political course of this Nation. It is regrettable that decisions of such vital import to the people of the United States are made by such a small percentage of eligible voters.

In 1940 there were 83,789,000 civilians of voting age in the United States. Only 49,820,000—59 percent—voted for Presidential electors. In the election just passed, 93,704,000 citizens were eligible to go to the ballot box. Only 48,680,000—52 percent—did so. In the 1900 Presidential election 74 percent of the eligible voters went to the polls. Nineteen hundred and forty and 1948 were Presidential years. In 1946 only 38 percent of the eligibles participated in the congressional elections.

From my own experience and observation I am convinced many more citizens would have gone to the polls if November 2 had been a legal holiday. Parenthetically, I do not think a heavier vote in November would have produced a change in tenancy at the White House. Nevertheless, many workers find it extremely difficult—if not impossible—to work an 8-hour shift and return to their precincts in time to vote.

Some people will argue that if the voting privilege means as much to Americans as it should, citizens will find a way to cast their ballots. There is some point to the argument. However, there is no doubt in my mind, participation in congressional and Presidential elections will be significantly increased if election day becomes a legal holiday.

All the Fourth of July means to our people finds its chance for expression on election day. I propose, therefore, that we—the elected representatives of the people—acting for the people, dedicate that day to the lofty concepts upon which this Nation is founded. Those concepts, with all the benefits emanating therefrom, will be preserved and increasingly activated, so long as free people exercise their free choice for men and issues at the ballot box.

EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT—SPONSORS OF JOINT RESOLUTION

Mr. GILLETTE. Mr. President, a group of Senators have joined in the introduction of a proposed amendment to the Federal Constitution which is popularly known as the equal rights amendment. ## THE FREEDOM TRAIN

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and myself, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States. A brief statement has been prepared which may be of some benefit to the committee when this measure is considered, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement presented by the Senator from Illinois will be printed in the RECORD.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 31) to provide for the acquisition and operation of the Freedom Train by the Archivist of the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. LUCAS (for himself and Mr. WHERRY), was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

The statement presented by Mr. LUCAS was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR LUCAS

THE FREEDOM TRAIN

The attached interim report of the president of the American Heritage Foundation to the board of trustees of the foundation, dated November 4, 1948, sets out the facts concerning the Freedom Train.

The American Heritage Foundation is a private charitable corporation organized to carry out a plan conceived by the Attorney General of the United States to make available to the people of the country the opportunity to see the documents which constitute milestones in the history of our country.

The original plan was that the foundation would underwrite the operation of the train for 13 months from September 17, 1947. Because of the tremendous demand for the train, sponsorship of it by the foundation was extended, first, to January 1, 1949, and now, finally, to January 22, 1949. The foundation desires now to terminate its sponsorship.

However, tremendous demand for continuance of the train's tour still exists. As of a recent date the train had visited 350 cities in the United States. To carry out the purpose of giving opportunity to view the documents aboard the train to all sections of the country, it was possible usually for the train to stop only 1 day in each city. Approximately 45,000,000 people have participated in ceremonies relating to the train. However, because of the physical limitations on the number of people who can pass through the train in a given time, only 4,500,000 have actually seen the documents aboard the train and countless millions had to be turned away disappointed.

It appears that there is a large amount of sentiment in the Congress for the continuance by the Government of the tour of the train. Congressmen MCCORMACK and MARTIN of Massachusetts have introduced a bill for this purpose (H. J. Res. 84). Preliminary inquiries indicate that if the Government desires to continue operation of the Freedom Train the American Heritage Foundation will turn over to it, free of charge, the equipment, of very considerable value, which the foundation assembled for storage and display of the documents. No negotiations have yet been had with respect to use by the Government of equipment and facilities not owned by the American Heritage Foundation.

The train is made up of an engine and seven cars. The engine, a Diesel electric, has been loaned, with fuel and crews, by the American Locomotive Co. and the General Electric Co. The three cars presently containing the documents are owned by the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. but were transformed into museum cars at very considerable expense by the American Heritage Foundation. It had been indicated that the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. will be willing to sell these cars to the Government at their second-hand value when they were delivered to the American Heritage Foundation. An additional car, containing humidifying, firefighting, and similar equipment, has been loaned by the Santa Fe Railroad, and three pullman cars for accommodation of the crews, the guard of honor, and other personnel aboard the train have been rented from the Pullman Co. It is believed that there will be no difficulty about continuing arrangements appropriate to retaining the last four mentioned cars. All units of the Freedom Train are, of course, especially painted.

Approximately 80 percent of the documents aboard the Freedom Train are owned by the Government. The majority of these come from the National Archives, the rest from the Library of Congress. The other documents, 20 percent of the total, have been loaned by private owners. The Archivist and the Librarian of Congress favor the continued operation of the train, because of its tremendous educational value, and they have agreed, as has the Attorney General, that the Archivist is the logical person to continue operation of the train if its operation is taken over by the Government. It is believed that the owners of private documents will be glad to continue their loan for continued exhibition.

Preliminary estimates indicate that acquisition of the train and its operation by the Government until June 30, 1950, will cost between $2,000,000 and $2,500,000.

The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $20,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

DECENTRALIZATION OF NATIONAL DEFENSE DEPARTMENT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I desire to submit a resolution. I should like to read it into the RECORD and then make a few remarks about it. The resolution reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Armed Services, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to possible methods by which the Department of National Defense may be further decentralized and the activities of the Department transferred to field offices for purposes of greater national security, economy, efficiency, and a better and more expeditious handling of the problems of the Nation's armed services.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate not later than 6 months from the date of this resolution's adoption the result of the study and investigation together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

Mr. President, the resolution I am submitting directs the Senate Armed Services Committee to make a full and complete study of ways and means of decentralizing the National Defense Department, and report back to the Senate in 6 months.

The problem of all the world is how best to make each nation more adequate to meet the challenges of the present and the future. This resolution is similar to Senate Resolution 136, which I submitted in the Eightieth Congress, for the purpose of securing a similar study by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry on ways and means of decentralizing the Department of Agriculture. At that time I stated in substance that the Department of Agriculture needed to be decentralized for very apparent reasons. Here on the east coast we are trying to prescribe the medicine for agricultural districts all over the Nation. I am still vitally interested in securing a dispersion to field offices of our overcentralized agricultural organization. However, it is quite obvious that our primary need is for decentralization of our vastly overcentralized Military, Naval, and Air Force Establishments from the Pentagon Building across the river, and from other jammed buildings throughout this congested city.

I need not call attention to what happened in Japan because of one bomb. I need not call attention to what could happen here, so far as concerns the Nation being totally put out of business if its heart in the armed services and in the legislative and executive services were blown to smithereens.

There is no need to become agitated over what I am saying. But, Mr. President, I am seriously concerned. We are in the habit of believing that a New York doctor can prescribe for a sick patient in one of the Dakotas. I think it was clearly demonstrated in the last election that that could not be done. I am satisfied that it cannot be done in connection with some other things.

It is necessary that we get away from petty considerations and realize that we are living in a world in which New York City could be blotted out by one bomb. The same statement applies to the Capital of our country. If in this city is located the heart of the defense of the Nation, it is more than important that the legislative branch begin to think in terms of today, and not in terms of yesterday or 10 years ago.

I need not point out that a recent newspaper item purported to describe an incident which occurred on the shores of the Caspian Sea. The item was undoubtedly authentic. A great explosion occurred. It was recorded by the seismograph, or whatever other instruments Georgetown University and other universities throughout the country have. The intelligence branch of the Government went into action and ascertained that it was not an earthquake. We need not surmise as to what happened. It undoubtedly was an experimentation with fission. The result was the destruction of life and property. Russia is moving ahead.

I need not call attention to the fact that on the shores of the Mediterranean there is a possible volcano. The same situation prevails in China and in many other places. If that be true, are we going to proceed on the theory that we are sufficient if we adopt the ways and means of yesterday? No, Mr. President.

The first step is the decentralization of our thinking. The next step is the decentralization of the brains which unite the great organization which we call the National Defense Department. That Department is centralized in Washington. Time and time again I have pointed out that a single atomic bomb hitting Washington could with one blow blast the very brain and central nervous system and the heart of our entire national security organization. For many long months I have been in contact with the National Security Resources Board, the Department of Defense, and other officials in our Government regarding this suicidal military overcentralization. We have heard promises of dispersion of some of the central organization, but those promises mean as little to me as they must mean to the Soviet high command, which undoubtedly recognizes that America would be a sucker for an atomic punch against the Pentagon. I recognize the tremendous administrative problems involved in decentralization; but when has America ever hesitated to meet, head on, problems of this character, problems which go to the safety and the future of our Nation?

Obviously, dispersing our security setup cannot be accomplished overnight, but it should be begun at the earliest possible date. As civilians, I am sure that no Member of the Senate, including myself, would want the Defense Department to breach any security regulations by telling to what extent secret plans already have been made for decentralization. At the same time, as civilians, we have the right to know of those plans which can be made a matter of public information. There are all sorts of rumors of secret master plans and super plans to disperse central military headquarters from Washington; but, from the look of things, those plans will not go into operation until Washington is decentralized by an atomic bomb blasting this city to rubble.

I yield to no one in my love and admiration of this Capital City, but I do not want to see it become a death trap for a million people or for 148,000,000 people who look to our military chiefs for adequate security.

Mr. President, in the days which lie ahead, our time will be taken with a great many small matters, relatively speaking; and we shall be overlooking the big problem. We shall be thinking that we can deal with Russia—and I hope to God we can; but in this world there are 3,200,000,000 human beings, and there are less than 300,000,000 of us who think in terms of personal liberty and the American way of life. We can make all the arrangements and agreements we want to make; but the Kaiser's idea of a treaty as being merely a scrap of paper is still the order of the day, except insofar as we have dealings, for we keep faith. However, on the commercial basis, Mr. President, and on the political basis there is but one power, and that is the power of force and foresight and ingenuity and invention that will determine the course of human beings for centuries to come. The millennium is not just around the corner, so we had better decentralize.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, let me ask whether it would be better to have the resolution require a report within 4 months. Six months will be about the 15th of July.

Mr. WILEY. In the resolution I used the words "at least."

Mr. LANGER. I wonder if the Senator would mind amending the resolution so as to provide for a report within 4 months.

Mr. WILEY. I shall be glad to accept that amendment.

The resolution (S. Res. 30) as modified was referred to the Committee on Armed Services, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Armed Services, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is hereby authorized and directed to make a full and complete study and investigation with respect to possible methods by which the Department of National Defense may be further decentralized and the activities of the Department transferred to field offices for purposes of greater national security, economy, efficiency, and a better and more expeditious handling of the problems of the Nation's armed services.

SEC. 2. The committee shall report to the Senate not later than 4 months from the date of this resolution's adoption the result of the study and investigation together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable.

AMENDMENT OF CLOTURE RULE—NOTICE OF HEARINGS

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, a moment ago the Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER] referred to the question of limitation of debate in the Senate, and I said that hearings would soon be held by the committee on the subject. I now announce that the Committee on Rules and Administration decided yesterday to begin hearings on the several resolutions which have been submitted with respect to the limitation of debate in the Senate, at 10:30 on Monday, January 24. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] was the first to request the hearings, and we will hear him first. Other Senators are invited to appear if they so desire.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona a moment ago inquired of me whether I could indicate on what day certain the change with respect to the Senate rule would be made. I call his attention to the fact that when the President presented a very formidable program, including this particular matter, last summer to us at the so-called turnip session, he advised us that 15 days should be ample to accomplish the entire program. So I hope members of the committee will have the President's admonition very much in mind in considering the subject of limitation of debate, and all the rest of the program which we now have before the Congress.

Mr. HAYDEN. This particular matter was not mentioned by the President.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think Members of the Senate should be under no delusion that before we accomplish anything respecting civil rights we will have to do something about filibusters.

INCREASED COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN GOVERNMENT OFFICIALS

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 103.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Will that motion require unanimous consent?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will not. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that all that is required is a majority vote. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Morning business has been concluded, has it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has.

Mr. WHERRY. Is not the motion to proceed to the consideration of any bill debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Not in the morning hour.

The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill, S. 103, to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and heads and assistant heads of executive departments and independent agencies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may present an amendment at this time, in order that the amendment may be before the Senate, before the Senator proceeds with his address?

Mr. O'CONOR. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I send to the desk an amendment to the bill and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after line 15 on page 3 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall become effective at noon on January 20, 1949.

It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 103.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may submit an amendment?

Mr. O'CONOR. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be read at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 3, after the period in line 2, it is proposed to insert a new sentence, as follows:

In determining the amount to be deducted from the compensation of any official whose salary is determined under this act for the purposes of section 3 (a) of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and in computing the amount of any annuity under such act, any increase in compensation provided by this act shall be disregarded until further action of the Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 103.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 103) to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and heads and assistant heads of executive departments and independent agencies, which had been reported from the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service with amendments.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, the legislation embodied in Senate bill 103 now before the Senate is of greatest importance to all the people of the United States. If the Congress acts favorably on this bill it will be the first time in the history of our country that comprehensive action has been taken to consider and evaluate the salaries of the men we hold responsible for the day-to-day management of our governmental agencies.

The first section of the bill would increase the salary of the President to $100,000 and provide him with an additional expense allowance of $50,000 a year. It would also increase the salaries of the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to $30,000 each and provide these officials with expense allowances of $10,000 a year.

Section 2 of the bill would increase the compensation of Cabinet members to $25,000 a year.

Sections 3, 4, and 5 would increase the rates of compensation of heads of independent agencies, members of independent boards and commissions, and certain White House officials to $22,500, $20,000, and $17,500, upon the basis of their respective responsibilities. The positions covered and the salaries to be paid are specifically set forth in the bill.

Section 8 of the bill corrects certain inequities resulting from the exclusion from the provisions of the Postal Rate Revision and Federal Employees Salary Act of 1948 of employees of the District of Columbia municipal government and certain employees in the Foreign Service by granting to such employees the $330 increase provided by that act for Government employees generally.

The bill under consideration has been developed after more than 1½ years' study by a subcommittee composed of the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], and the junior Senator from Maryland, appointed by the chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee in July 1947.

The subcommittee has made a very thorough study of the problem. It began by taking a complete inventory of all positions in the Government paying $9,975 and above. There are approximately 3,000 positions in that category in the Government, including the 223 covered by Senate bill 103. All available information was assembled concerning these three thousand-odd positions: the salary rate for each position, how the salaries are fixed, how appointments to the positions are made, and when the salary rate was established. This information was tabulated in various ways to give the subcommittee an opportunity to study and compare the positions individually, by groups and by agencies. These data were studied by the subcommittee to determine how the salaries should be fixed for these top-level positions, and what rates would be a fair compensation for the heavy responsibilities carried by the men in such positions.

Following its consideration of the matter in the spring of 1948, the subcommittee submitted its recommendations to the entire Senate Committee on Civil Service. The committee then gave attention to the subject matter and reported favorably a bill, S. 1537, Eightieth Congress, but insufficient time was left for the discussion of the matter in the Senate and the portion of the bill relating to the top-bracket officials was deleted when the measure was passed.

After months of study the subcommittee held hearings on a proposed redraft of a bill. The President's views were expressed in these hearings regarding the pay of positions in the bill, other than his own, the Vice President's and that of the Speaker of the House. Also, the subcommittee heard former President Hoover, Mr. John Stevenson, president of the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co.; Robert Ramspeck, former long-time Member of Congress, now vice president of the Air Transport Association; Arthur Flemming, former Civil Service Commissioner, now president of Ohio Wesleyan University; and representatives of Federal employee groups.

Before testifying for the President in favor of the bill, the Director of the Budget circulated the draft of the bill prepared by the subcommittee to all agencies in the executive branch with the request that they express their views in writing concerning the provisions contained therein.

Each of these agency replies was carefully considered in relation to the organizational structure of the executive branch, and, where possible within the framework approved by the President, their suggestions were incorporated.

Therefore, S. 103 as introduced by the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] represents the best judgment of the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee, of representatives of the executive branch, the Hoover Commission, competent persons from private industry, and representatives of the employee organizations.

On January 20 a new presidential term will begin. Because of this fact it is of utmost importance that this legislation be enacted. Two factors control the necessity for immediate action. First, unless the salaries of the President and Vice President are acted upon before January 20, the Constitution would prevent this act from becoming operative for the duration of the term of office upon which they will enter on that day. Second, the men and women in the positions covered in the bill include the executives with whom the President must surround himself to carry out his tremendous task of managing the Government programs approved by the Congress.

To secure for the Government the services of the best management talent available for these positions, the President must be able to compete with private enterprise and to offer opportunities for public service without at the same time asking that too great personal sacrifices be made. To do this he must be in a position to offer them fair salaries. Fair salaries will attract good men, and good men are needed in our Government. Unfortunately too many capable officials have been forced to leave the Government service because of insufficient compensation. After acquiring valuable experience and knowledge in Government posts, they have been compelled to accept better paying positions with private concerns.

Because of the action taken by Congress in recent years to increase salaries at the lower levels, the salaries which the President can offer top officials today are in many instances lower than those of subordinates whose work they will be guiding and supervising. This is an unsound condition which would not be tolerated in any private business. It is a situation which the Congress must correct immediately if opportunity is to be afforded to the President to secure the most capable executives and improve the management of our agencies.

I submit, Mr. President, that the Congress should act forthwith to correct this intolerable situation, and to increase the efficiency of governmental processes. Certainly the best available talent must be attracted to public service if the President is to be assisted in carrying out the tremendous tasks which confront him as he begins his new term.

The salaries of the key positions in our Government are today out of line in comparison to the responsibilities attached to them. They bear no relationship to each other and certainly have no rational relationship to the salaries paid for subordinate positions, when the salaries for many subordinate positions are higher than those paid the agency head. This situation has been brought about because of the fact that before Senate bill 1537 was introduced in the last Congress, relating to the positions now covered in Senate bill 103, the Congress had never given consideration to the problem of the salaries for the heads of agencies, except on a piecemeal basis. Actually, the rates of pay for these positions have in practically every case been considered and fixed individually.

Under these circumstances, no study could be made of the relationships between them, and none was made. Consequently, we have subordinate positions paying salaries as high as $15,000 in agencies where the men responsible for the entire agencies' operations are receiving $10,000. There are also instances where certain subordinate positions have been taken out of the Classification Act pay scale, and the salary fixed by statute at several thousand dollars above the rate paid for other comparable positions under the Classification Act, and above the rates for positions as agency heads.

In any sensibly operated organization, whether it be public or private, the rates of pay for the positions making up the organization should reflect the relative responsibility of the position. Senate bill 103 represents the first comprehensive effort to accomplish this simple principle of management in the Federal Government. It is a most important step. It will bring order into a salary structure which Congress has allowed to get badly out of adjustment. It will establish fair salaries for these important positions in the Government, and will provide the President a much-needed asset. Moreover, it will provide a benchmark and guide to the Congress in fixing the salaries for subordinate positions.

It became apparent to the subcommittee studying the problem of top-level salaries that in determining what positions the bill should cover, there was only one clear distinction that could be drawn among the 3,000 positions which are compensated at $9,975 and above. That is the distinction between positions as the heads and assistant heads of departments and agencies, and the positions subordinate to them. Every conceivable combination was considered; and in every case it became apparent that in order to be absolutely fair in the judgments applied, the distinction between positions as the heads and assistant heads of the departments and agencies and subordinate positions was the only one that could possibly be made on a sound basis by the Congress.

The committee is of the definite opinion that this bill does not cover all the top-rank positions, the salaries of which should be readjusted. Furthermore, it emphasized the fact that this is but one step in what should be a comprehensive effort to correct the inequities throughout the governmental service. Included among the very important posts which the committee feels should be the subject of further correction and increase are those of Administrator of Rural Electrification Administration, Director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Commissioner of Public Roads, Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, among others. The salaries paid for these positions are admittedly too low, and should be raised at the earliest possible date. However, in the opinion of the subcommittee and the others who have studied this problem, the salaries of these positions should be fixed under the provisions of the Classification Act, as is now the case for the majority of them.

Therefore, it was the recommendation of the subcommittee that the Classification Act salary scales be revised early in this session of Congress. Any revision of that act should provide a maximum salary which would be sufficient to increase the salaries of the bureau chiefs and the heads of subordinate agencies to a realistic level and place them in their proper relationship with the positions covered in the bill now under consideration.

Senate bill 103, if enacted, will be the first step in a program which will bring about a realistic and well-balanced structure for the Federal Government from the top to the bottom. With its enactment, the endless confusion and argument as to what should be the proper level for the top management positions in the Government will be resolved.

It will make possible early consideration of the proper pay scales for subordinate positions, without extended committee discussions which otherwise might develop.

Such discussions might well result in the failure of the Congress to take action at this session on this highly important matter. If Senate bill 103 is not enacted by the Congress and if early action is not taken to revise the Classification Act so as to make higher salaries possible for persons in subordinate positions, other capable men can be expected to leave the Government service; and at the present low salaries their replacement with well-qualified men will be, as the President has found in many cases in the past, almost an impossible task.

The simple fact that the salaries of many of the men filling subordinate bureau-head and other positions are at present higher than that of the head of the agency in which they are employed is proof that the salaries of their positions have been increased to some degree without any consideration of the salaries of their superiors.

Again it can be emphasized that after exhaustive study of this problem, our subcommittee, in considering the three-thousand-odd positions at $9,975 and above, concluded, first, that there was only one clear line of demarcation that could be fairly drawn, namely, the line between the heads and assistant heads of departments and agencies and subordinate positions; secondly, that positions immediately below the heads and assistant heads of the departments and agencies should be paid under the salary scales of the Classification Act; and, third, that the salaries of practically the entire group of 3,000 are too low to allow the Government to secure and keep top management talent in these positions.

Mr. President, great importance was attached to the authorization for the appointment of the Commission on Organization of the Executive Branch of the Government. Considerable funds have been expended in the study of this Commission under the able leadership of the former President of the United States, Mr. Herbert Hoover. This bill has the unqualified endorsement of that Commission. Mr. Hoover himself testified in favor of this bill. Mr. John Stevenson, president of Penn Mutual Life Insurance Co., and chairman of the Hoover Commission task force on Federal Personnel Management; Arthur Flemming, former Civil Service Commissioner, now president of Ohio Wesleyan University, and member of the Hoover Commission; and Robert Ramspeck, executive vice president of the Air Transport Association, and former chairman of the House Committee on Civil Service, all supported the purpose of the bill and the proposed salary rates contained in it.

All of these men stated that they believed the Government must pay more adequate salaries for its top-management positions in order to attract and retain the services of competent persons for these jobs. The importance of having capable men in these positions was greatly stressed by every witness before the committee. The representatives of the employee organizations were 100 percent in favor of immediate enactment of this bill.

They are aware of, and stressed the importance of, having competent men in these positions as well as the imperative need for immediate action to raise the salaries for the positions involved. While they recognize that the bill does not include the positions of subordinate officials, they believe the increases provided in this bill will make early action possible to adjust those other salaries and put them in their proper relationship to the salaries of the heads and assistant heads of the departments and agencies.

Finally, Mr. President, the cost of the provisions of the bill which would increase the salaries of the heads and assistant heads of the departments and agencies will be $1,600,000 a year. That is a relatively small cost for the benefits which will accrue to the Government as a result of the enactment of this legislation.

In conclusion, I wish to refer briefly to a portion of the letter transmitted to the President pro tempore of the Senate by the President of the United States, from which I read as follows:

That bill—

Referring to S. 103—

establishes a salary range of from $17,500 to $25,000 for the officials in question. These provisions are in accordance with recommendations made to the subcommittee by the administration. I urge their passage in their present form. Questions concerning the compensation of Federal officers and employees not included in this bill should not be permitted to impede or delay its passage, but should be considered separately at an early date.

The letter from the President of the United States to the President pro tempore continues:

On January 20, a new Presidential term will begin. During that term the executive branch of the Government will be called upon to bear responsibilities of great magnitude. Prompt action on this bill is of great importance to me in strengthening the management of the executive branch to meet those responsibilities. Its small cost will be repaid many times. I ask the Congress to give me the means which will make it possible for me to get and keep the men who are required for the job ahead.

I hope that this legislation will be enacted into law immediately.

Sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield for a question?

Mr. O'CONOR. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I invite the Senator's attention to section 105 of the United States Code, and I ask whether the Senator will state how many assistants the President is going to have?

Mr. O'CONOR. Eleven.

Mr. LANGER. I now call the Senator's attention to lines 16 and 17, on page 4 of the bill, reading as follows:

Two at rates not exceeding $22,500 per annum, three at rates not exceeding $20,000 per annum, and seven at rates not exceeding $17,500 per annum.

Do not those three items, "2," "3," and "7," total 12?

Mr. O'CONOR. That is very true.

In answer to the question of the Senator from North Dakota, with respect to secretaries, as I have stated, there is in addition one other secretary of the Executive, the Secretary of the National Security Council, who is included in the category to which the Senator from North Dakota refers. Eleven is the correct answer as to the number of secretaries.

Mr. LANGER. How many does the Chief Executive have at the present time?

Mr. O'CONOR. Eleven.

Mr. LANGER. That is, now?

Mr. O'CONOR. That is correct. In other words, the bill does not create any new positions. Its primary purpose is to determine the proper pay for the positions already created.

Mr. LANGER, Mr. CAPEHART, and Mr. FLANDERS addressed the Chair.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Maryland has concluded, I should like to have the floor in my own right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, the pending subject has been before the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service in some form or other for approximately 8 years. The entire matter of salaries for Federal employees has been considered repeatedly. The Senate and the country as a whole owe a great debt to the distinguished Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] for the very complete and detailed study he made of the matter while a member of the committee, as chairman of a subcommittee appointed by former Senator Mead, of New York, when he was acting chairman of the committee, which appointment, I believe, was confirmed by the distinguished President pro tempore now occupying the chair, and which was later confirmed by the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ]. A very careful study was made. Finally the Byrd-Langer amendment was agreed to, which provided that within practically every department a certain number of persons should be removed from the Federal pay roll. Enforcement was left to the Bureau of the Budget so that the number of persons on the Federal pay roll could be reduced. Immediately after the war there were approximately 3,000,000 employees on the Federal pay roll. The Byrd-Langer amendment was enforced, but, as every Senator knows, legislation was subsequently enacted particularly exempting new employees from its provisions. The result was, for example, that some 250,000 employees were added by the Veterans' Administration alone. Employees were added by the Atomic Energy Commission. The distinguished Senator from Virginia has repeatedly drawn the attention of the Senate to the fact that the number of Federal employees has not been decreasing so rapidly as we might desire.

As the distinguished junior Senator from Maryland stated a few moments ago, in July 1947, I, as chairman of the committee, appointed a subcommittee consisting of the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], and the distinguished Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR]. Bear in mind that was in July 1947. I am sure all the senior Members of the Senate are familiar with the fact that in the month of June 1948 our committee, upon recommendation of a subcommittee, reported a pay-increase bill. The bill was amended on the floor upon motion of the distinguished Senator from Virginia. Certain of the top-flight salaries were eliminated through the action of the Senate. Immediately thereafter we again took up the matter of pay increases for various Federal employees. The distinguished Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN] raised a question with respect to employees within the District of Columbia. The committee refused to report the bill for a pay increase to those employees unless a District sales tax were enacted. Certain Senators who were opposed to the sales tax fought the measure, with the result that when the Congress adjourned nothing had been accomplished for those employees.

Today, Mr. President, we face a very peculiar situation. My friend on the opposite side of the aisle, for whom I have the most affectionate regard, knows that, as a member of the committee, I was in a hopeless minority of 1 against 10. I alone opposed the passage of the measure in its present form. I was astounded at that time, as I was astounded this morning, to have the distinguished Senator from Maryland quote as a great authority, as the man who says the bill should be passed, a former President, Herbert Hoover, now head of the Hoover Commission. My mind goes back to a time only a few years ago when I heard certain of the same distinguished gentlemen, who the other day quoted with approval Mr. Hoover at our committee meeting, say that everything Herbert Hoover did was wrong. They made fun of him and ridiculed him. Now it is said to be a great tribute to Herbert Hoover, when the very Senators who a few years ago ridiculed him now rise on the Senate floor, as did the junior Senator from Maryland, and say the bill should be passed because Herbert Hoover, that great authority, said it should be passed because he had made an investigation of the subject and found the legislation was desirable.

Mr. President, so far as the study mentioned by the distinguished Senator from Maryland is concerned, I call attention to the fact that last June some of the members of the Bureau of the Budget were called before the committee and were asked how long a time would be required to draw up a bill which would include the heads of bureaus and departments. Mr. Winslow at that time stated that it would take between 6 and 7 months. We come back today, and what do we find? Under this bill, if it be passed, the head of the Rural Electrification Administration, a man who passes on millions of dollars worth of contracts, is omitted from the suggested salary increase; he is not to receive an increase. The head of the Bureau of Immigration, which has charge of 6,000,000 aliens, and which has charge at this time of deportation proceedings in 12,000 cases—the man whose duty it is to keep Communists out of this country—is excluded from the proposed salary increase. The head of the Bureau of Internal Revenue is excluded, as are all the other officials named a few moments ago by the distinguished Senator from Maryland. It is said that they will be taken care of some time in the dim and distant future; it may be within 2 years or 3 years. Who says that, Mr. President? I have here the report of the subcommittee, and I wish to call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Maryland to page 13 thereof, on which it is stated that an effort will be made to accomplish it in the near future, possibly at this session of the Congress.

Mr. President, I submit that the subcommittee has not made a thorough study of the subject. I submit, on the contrary, that the report states that there are 3,107 positions in the executive branch and certain other agencies receiving annual salaries of $9,975; but less than 300 positions are covered by the bill.

Mr. O'CONOR. The number as previously stated by me is 223.

Mr. LANGER. In other words, out of the 3,107 the committee has picked out 223. It does not make any difference how honorable and fine is the record of the head of the REA or the head of the FBI. They are excluded. The report says that it is not sure whether their case will be taken up this year.

One of the reasons for passing this bill, it is said, is that it will improve morale. Maybe it would improve morale in the particular departments affected, but I submit that in 2,700 other places the morale, instead of being improved, would be lowered, because of the fact that men who do no more work, in some instances, and much less important work, in some instances, suddenly have their salaries increased, while other salaries are left at $10,000. That is certainly not the way to improve morale.

Mr. President, an Assistant Attorney General will have his salary increased to $22,500, under this bill. But Mr. Hoover, who is head of the FBI and who employs as many as 10,000 agents, will have his salary remain at $10,000.

I again refer, Mr. President, to the Commissioner of Immigration. In my judgment there is no more important job than is his. He is omitted from the salary increase. His salary will be left at the sum of $10,000.

Mr. President, both the Republican platform and the Democratic platform pledged economy. We went before the people, both the Republicans and the Democrats, and said we would economize. Yet here is bill No. 1, Mr. President, to raise the salaries of 223 Government employees, from the President down, as the first action of the majority party toward economy.

When I inquired in the committee meeting I was told that it was an action for economy, because those 223 employees affected will do much better work when they receive more salary; their morale will increase. I submit, Mr. President, that when 2,700 other officials are omitted, we have the very kind of piecemeal legislation which the distinguished Senator from Maryland said a few moments ago had been in effect for many years. As a matter of fact, the subcommittee was appointed to take care of all the Federal employees at one time.

Mr. President, I take issue with the expressions in the majority report of the Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, entitled "Compensation of Top Government Officials." My reasons are as follows:

The President of the United States unwittingly is being made an example of the need for adjusting the compensation of salaries of top Government officials. Considerable has been said on the necessity for adjusting the President's personal expense account, although the subcommittee was silent on the entire matter of the President's salary during the Eightieth Congress. I object to any means of putting the President in the position of having to draw the load of pulling several hundred high-placed officials into even more lucrative salaries without first calling attention to the actual facts.

What are the facts, Mr. President? We do not find them in the report of the subcommittee. There is nothing in the report stating the amount of the President's personal expense allowance. I want to set the record straight by stating that, although I find nothing in the report stating just what the President's personal expense allowance is today, today's figure actually is $40,000 and not the popularly supposed $25,000 so often referred to. As recently as 1946, the $25,000 figure was raised to $40,000; nor need the President account in any way except by voucher for the expenses so authorized. This, of course, is as it should be considering his exalted office.

The majority views of the committee have not explained to the Senate that, although the President is authorized to have an entertainment and travel fund for his personal account of not less than $40,000, during the 2 years such authorization has existed he has not used this amount, despite the national campaign intervening. For the fiscal year 1948 the President used only $32,039 of the $40,000 granted. Therefore, there has been no demonstration of the need for increasing this personal, tax-free expense account.

So far as the salary of the President is concerned, I find no reason for failing to adjust the figure from $75,000 to $150,000, if the majority so desires, although it should still be noted that there is no provision for changing the language as today expressed, which says the salary should be "in full."

It is possible the committee majority does not intend to set $90,000 as the actual figure, but the amount of the allowance is not freely discussed in the report.

I call attention further to the fact that, inasmuch as there is no conflict in language between S. 103 and section 42, title 3, of the United States Code, we are entitled to assume that the President shall receive in full for his services the amount so provided in the bill, $100,000, as salary. This means that if the Bureau of Internal Revenue sees fit it may rule that the President may receive this salary "in full," which can have no connotation other than that there shall be no tax levied on the remuneration.

In the Congress' zeal to be fair to men in high office, it must not lose its sense of proportion in dealing even-handedly with those whose classification as taxpayers will in nowise be distorted.

A great deal has been said recently about the desire of the Bureau of the Budget and the Civil Service Commission to deal with the chiefs of the bureaus separately from the proposed legislation, and for this reason such chiefs have been barred from consideration under the provisions of S. 103.

During the committee consideration on January 11, 1949, of the purposes of S. 103, we were told by the spokesman for the bill that bureau chiefs would be given separate and secondary attention for purposes of adjusting salaries.

Mr. President, I submit that the committee majority voiced sympathetic views on the subject, but failed to support my position in favor of actual attention to the financial plight of these officials.

Mr. President, I want every Senator on this floor to understand that the Bureau of the Budget in taking care of itself all right. At the very time when they bar every other bureau, the Bureau of the Budget is getting full consideration. Yet it, too, is only a bureau. Therefore we have rank discrimination as between the officials of bureaus, despite the protestations that bureaus are to be dealt with in separate legislation. It is interesting to note that it is the Bureau of the Budget which is one of the main activators in favor of this legislation, and that this bureau and its representatives have traipsed all over Capitol Hill, in session and out, actually writing the legislation to which the Congress is to be called upon to give its favor.

It is significant that the Bureau of the Budget is taken care of, and no other bureau is. If we can take care of one bureau by the proposed legislation, we should take care of every other bureau.

At no time has the pending legislation ever been considered or examined or participated in by the committee as a whole, despite the fact that this committee has employed a staff equipped and ready to give its assistance. Not until the entire transaction was completely finished has the committee been given more than a preview of the purpose of the bill. It is noteworthy that in the two hearings, one an executive session, the other public, no one was invited and no one was welcome to speak in opposition to the legislation. For a substantiation of this statement I invite careful study of the hearings. Of course, there were some union heads who appeared, the testimony showed, and what did they say? They were in favor of the proposal. "Just as soon as possible we want our union members to be reached, too."

Contrast the report on S. 103 to the evidence arrived at by the subcommittee in extensive and public hearings on S. 1848, S. 1849, S. 1930, S. 1931, and S. 1949. Those bills, Mr. President, were bills to raise the salaries of the little fellows, like the man who is trying to support his wife and child, as a mail handler, on $1,900 a year. When the bill affecting mail handlers was up for consideration, of course, we had to have public hearings. There were several hundred pages of public hearings, which lasted weeks and months, on every one of these four bills.

These bills were considered in support of the contention that the rank and file of Government employees and officials should be given like recognition for salary purposes. When those bills were up for consideration before the same three members of the subcommittee, before the distinguished Senator from Vermont, the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, and the distinguished Senator from Maryland, who had charge of the same four bills, public hearings were held. They were granted by the full committee. Everyone who wished to come and testify was permitted to do so, and notice was given on the floor of the Senate inviting people to testify. Yet here we find that bill No. 1 is presented to us, and if the District of Columbia employees were included, it would cost more than $1,600,000. I ask the distinguished Senator from Maryland if that is not correct.

Mr. O'CONOR. That is, the payments to the 7,500 employees of the District, which of course are made from another fund.

Mr. LANGER. How much does that amount to?

Mr. O'CONOR. It amounts to $2,700,000.

Mr. LANGER. What is the total involved, then?

Mr. O'CONOR. Six million two hundred-odd thousand dollars.

Mr. LANGER. In other words, we are not considering passing a bill for $1,600,000, but it involves more than $6,000,000. That is what this bill involves.

As to the four bills I have mentioned, anyone could appear to testify, and they were considered in support of the contention that the rank and file of Government employees and officials should be given like recognition for salary purposes. At that time the Bureau of the Budget was completely silent as to the necessity for adjusting salaries.

The President has been quoted as saying that he wants to bring down the cost of living as a means of bringing relief to Government employees. The cost of living has not even yet declined.

I wish to say to every Senator in all candor that the total salary increases since 1925 have been 49 percent. Those in the lower grades are getting salaries of $1,500 and $2,000, and some veterans get $2,400 or $2,500 a year. The cost of living has gone up 75 percent, according to the subcommittee's own report, while the salaries have increased only 49 percent. Yet it is proposed today to increase the salaries, not of the little fellows, but of those receiving large salaries. Some seem to be afraid those receiving the large salaries cannot get along on their salaries.

I submit, Mr. President, that we should carry out the original purpose of the legislation submitted back in July 1947, at the time the subcommittee considering it reported on the subject, and that there be no increase in higher salaries unless at the same time the little fellow is taken care of. He must eat, Mr. President. The little fellow, the veteran with a wife and child or children receiving $2,450, and in some cases $2,350, must eat, and so must his family. I submit that the Senate should see to it that, if we are going to have salary increases for the big fellows, at the same time we should take care of increasing the salaries of the little fellows down below.

WHAT THE REED-BULWINKLE BILL IS AND WHAT THE REED-BULWINKLE BILL IS NOT

Mr. REED. Mr. President, in 1942 the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice began proceedings before a Federal grand jury in Chicago involving certain railroads. It was contended that they had violated the antitrust laws by their participation in routine rate conferences among railroads and between railroads and shippers. These conferences had been openly and publicly carried on over a period of more than 40 years without question from any source. It was contended that such conferences, in and of themselves, were price-fixing conspiracies which violated the antitrust laws. I shall later discuss in some detail the situation thus created.

In 1944 the Department of Justice and the State of Georgia brought injunction suits against various railroads. These suits went further than the original contention that rate conferences, as such, violated the antitrust laws. They alleged an underlying conspiracy among the railroads to discriminate against the South and the West in the rates fixed and to discriminate against the West in services and other matters. Discriminatory freight rates for many years have been, and still are, unlawful under the terms of the Interstate Commerce Act.

That distinction is important. Those supporting the Reed-Bulwinkle bill, both in and out of Congress, were, and now are, interested solely in fixing a legal status for rate conference machinery necessary to the maintenance of an equitable structure of rates. It was never the purpose, or the result, of that bill to legalize discrimination in the rates fixed or conspiracy to fix discriminatory rates.

Under edicts laid down by Congress, rates charged by regulated carriers must not only be "just and reasonable" but must be fairly related so as to avoid preference and unfair discrimination. Railroads, for more than 40 years prior to 1942, had been engaging in conferences with each other and with their shippers concerning rates the individual carriers would file with the Interstate Commerce Commission. The purpose of those conferences was not only to establish rates to be filed by connecting lines but to work out differences between competing lines, as well, so the carriers might obey the mandate of the law in maintaining sound economic conditions in transportation and in avoiding preference, prejudice, and unfair practices in the rates filed. These organized conferences and public hearings had become a necessity in keeping the rate structure flexible and in step with the needs of commerce. They were only a preliminary step in the rate-making process. Any rates thus agreed to were no more than proposals, for they must still be filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission and remain subject to the complete power of the Commission under all the requirements of the law. The rights and interests of the traveling and shipping public were under the complete protection of Commission authority.

Since each carrier retained its right of individual and independent action and since the rates discussed were subject to complete control by the Commission, no one had assumed that there was anything unlawful or improper about those rate conferences. For more than 40 years they had been permitted to operate as public institutions without serious question.

But in 1942, during the darkest days of the war, the Antitrust Division came forth with the assertion that those rate conferences, and rate bureaus through which they were conducted, in and of themselves were price-fixing conspiracies carried on in violation of the antitrust laws.

There was instant reaction from the shipping public. Agitation for clarifying legislation began. All experienced traffic men regard these conferences as absolutely necessary to the movement of the Nation's commerce.

On the intervention of the Army, the Navy, and the Office of Defense Transportation, the criminal proceeding at Chicago was dropped. Under a law dealing with wartime emergencies, the Chairman of the War Production Board issued a certificate declaring such rate conferences to be "requisite to the prosecution of the war," and making it illegal to commence, under the antitrust laws, any civil or criminal action "with reference thereto." Early in 1943 a bill, S. 942, was introduced by Senator Wheeler to make sure those conferences would be valid and place them under the supervision of the Commission. Extended hearings were held on that proposal, but, under the assurance of the WPB certificate, that legislation was not then pressed.

However, in 1944, in the face of that certificate, the Antitrust Division and the State of Georgia brought the injunction suits mentioned a moment ago. These cases were known as the Lincoln case and the Georgia case. In both cases the defendant railroads pressed motions to have the cases dismissed, contending, among other things, that the suits were with reference to rate bureaus and were therefore barred by the WPB certificate. Against those contentions the courts, in each case, held that the broad purposes of those suits were to enjoin the railroads from carrying on an alleged conspiracy to discriminate against the South and West in freight rates and from conspiring to discriminate against the West in services rendered and in other matters.

In 1945 Representative BULWINKLE introduced a new bill intended to accomplish, in a somewhat different way, the purpose of the earlier bill, S. 942. It became known as the Bulwinkle bill and later as the Reed-Bulwinkle bill. It sought to establish a distinction between the treatment accorded a regulated industry and that accorded to business not subject to regulation. Its purpose and effect was not to validate discrimination against the South or West or any other part of the country, nor conspiracies to discriminate, but to make it clear that conference procedure in establishing rates and services, when found to be in the public interest and in furtherance of the national transportation policy, would not be unlawful and would be placed under the continuing regulation and supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

That legislation made the same distinction that had been made by the courts. The courts distinguished between an ordinary rate conference, as covered by the WPB certificate, and an underlying conspiracy to discriminate. Despite the certificate protecting ordinary rate conferences, the courts permitted the Government and Georgia to carry on suits the purposes of which are to enjoin conspiracy to discriminate. With that same distinction in mind the Reed-Bulwinkle Act was for the purpose of making certain that rate conferences are to be valid without at the same time validating conspiracy to discriminate. To make that distinction clear the bill made valid only those conferences and agreements expressly found to be in "furtherance of the national transportation policy." A high percentage of the time spent in debate by those opposed to the bill was devoted to the "discrimination" and "conspiracy to discriminate" features of the Georgia and Lincoln suits. Again and again supporters of the bill pointed out the confusion among those opposing the bill on this vital point.

Probably no transportation bill in history has evoked such public support from all parts of the country. Certainly no transportation measure has had a comparable record of hearings, debate, and action by both Houses of Congress. Beginning with the hearings on S. 942 in 1943 down through action on H. R. 2536 by the Seventy-ninth Congress and on S. 110 by the Eightieth Congress, there have been 71 days of public hearings before committees, 259 witnesses have testified, filling 4,551 printed pages of reports of hearings. More than a thousand organizations representing shippers, farmers, State and Federal commissions, labor organizations, and others have endorsed the bill. There have been four favorable reports by committees, requiring 76 pages to express majority views and 13 pages to show the minority views of one Senator and one House Member. There have been 11 days of debate in the House and Senate, filling 253 pages in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. There have been 35 speeches by Senators which inspired questions or comment from 48 Senators. The bill first passed the House by a vote of 277 to 45 on December 10, 1945. In the Eightieth Congress the bill was passed by the Senate by a vote of 60 to 27 on June 18, 1947, and was passed by the House on May 11, 1948, by a vote of 271 to 53. The conference report was adopted by both Houses without a record vote, was vetoed by the President, and the veto was overridden in the Senate by a vote of 63 to 25 and overridden in the House by a vote of 297 to 102.

When the Senate first passed the bill in 1947 the opposition was ably led by my friend and colleague from Georgia

[Mr. RUSSELL]. His opposition was based upon the belief—which I did then and do now contend was unfounded—that adoption of the bill would legalize or validate conspiracy by the carriers to establish or maintain a structure of freight rates which would discriminate against the people of Georgia and the South. A review of his statements makes this clear. His principal speech appears at pages 6601–6618 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 9, 1947. I have taken the time to review that speech and call attention to some quotations explaining his position. At the beginning of his speech, the Senator from Georgia said:

Furthermore, Mr. President, the measure would remove from the jurisdiction of the courts of this land two tremendously important pieces of pending litigation against the railroads and the appurtenant freight bureaus, one of them being the State of Georgia case, pending in the Supreme Court of the United States sitting as a court of original jurisdiction, the other being the civil action filed through the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice in an effort to break the stranglehold which the railroads have had upon the people of the West, and to obviate the discrimination against them in freight rates which they have so long borne.

At page 6603 appears an exchange between the Senator from Oklahoma, Mr. Moore, and the Senator from Georgia, as follows:

Mr. MOORE. I am anxious to understand the gravamen of the case which the State of Georgia filed in the Supreme Court as a court of original jurisdiction. Did that case have anything to do with matters dealt with in the pending bill, that is respecting rate-fixing bureaus, or is not that case an action brought to determine whether there was discrimination in freight rates?

Mr. RUSSELL. The charges were conspiracy to invoke unfair freight rates against the State of Georgia.

At page 6606 appears a statement by the Senator from Georgia in reply to comment by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON]. It is as follows:

Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut may intrigue himself with the idea that the railroads could not be run without rate bureaus; but I do not think we should become involved in that question, for I think it has no relationship to the issue which is now before us. No one is undertaking to abolish the rate bureaus. We are simply saying that the railroads should be operated in the same way that other corporations in the United States are operated.

The discrimination complained of was alleged to be not only against the South, but against the West as well. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], in commenting upon studies by the Board of Investigation and Research, said (p. 6609):

I might further suggest that it is my recollection, from the many meetings which I attended when we endeavored to have additional money appropriated in the Appropriations Committee in the last 2 years to continue the Board of Investigation and Research, that the western discriminations were even greater than the southern, particularly in the Nebraska area.

In reply to the statement by the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Georgia said:

Yes. There is no doubt that some of the States in the western regions are laboring under greater discriminations than we are confronted with in the South.

In his closing remarks the Senator from Georgia said:

Mr. President, we have been the victims of discriminatory practices which have affected us at every turn. We have been the victims of cartels which, through the discriminatory practices which this bill seeks to perpetuate, have held us in economic bondage because we could not wage this unequal struggle against the obstacles which have been inflicted upon us. * * * Mr. President, in the bill now before us we are asked to give our blessings to an indefinite prolongation of this subversion of our transportation system to the purpose to deny the West and the South any industrial development.

The above quotations and review of the full speech by the able Senator from Georgia show that he made it perfectly clear to the Senate that his objections to the bill, and those of his colleagues who joined with him, were based upon the fear that enactment of the legislation would legalize action to perpetuate a structure of freight rates which would discriminate against the South and West, and that the pending suit of the State of Georgia was not to destroy rate conferences but to enjoin conspiracy to discriminate.

In the closing moments of the consideration of the bill the Senate adopted the so-called Russell amendment, the purport of which was to insulate the Georgia suit against any possible effect of the bill.

In the spring of 1948 the House passed the bill, but in doing so it made changes, at least two of which are important to this discussion. It eliminated the Russell amendment and narrowed the scope of the bill so that it covered only agreements as to rates and related matters and excluded agreements as to matters of service. The conferees finally adopted the House version of the bill and the conference report was then adopted by both Houses. The bill was vetoed by the President and was then presented for passage in the Senate notwithstanding the veto.

My attention has been called to a recent memorandum opinion by the Court in the Lincoln case which refers to statements I made on the floor of the Senate during debate on the veto message. During oral argument on a motion in that case, one of the attorneys for the Government read to the Court one or two of my sentences. The attorney who quoted my language took it out of context, failed to quote the qualification which was implicit in the full text of my statement, and attributed to it a meaning which was never intended. That would have been apparent to one who had had the benefit of the full text and who was familiar with the background and history against which my statements were made.

The Senator from Georgia and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] questioned me as to the reasons for and the effect of the elimination of the Russell amendment by the conferees. The statements I made, and which were quoted to the court at Lincoln, Nebr., were parts of statements in reply to those questions. I was quoted as saying:

There is nothing in the bill that would affect the antitrust proceeding pending in the court at Lincoln, Nebr.

Further:

The bill will not affect the Georgia case or the Lincoln case in the slightest degree.

Those quotations taken alone do not constitute a fair statement of what I said and of what I meant. In this connection, it is proper to look at the full context of my remarks and to bear in mind the position of the Senator from Georgia. Knowing that his real concern was the fear of legislative action which would legalize conspiracy to discriminate against the South, I said in my reply to the Senator from Georgia:

Be that as it may, I want to say to my friend from Georgia and my friend from Alabama, there is nothing in the bill that in any way allows or permits discrimination against the South in the freight-rate structure; there is nothing in the bill that would affect the validity of the Georgia suit in the Supreme Court, and there is nothing in the bill that would affect the antitrust proceeding pending in the court at Lincoln, Nebr. This bill has been trimmed down to where the only thing it does is to give exemption in the making of rates, fares, and charges and the actual handling of equipment and costs of handling equipment as between the different railroads.

A few moments later, in reply to a question from the Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCFARLAND] I said:

Mr. President, the case of the State of Georgia rests upon the allegation of a conspiracy between the railroads to establish rates which were illegal because discriminatory. The bill has no relation at all to any case that rests upon conspiracy. The bill, if enacted into law as I firmly believe it will be today, will not affect the Georgia case or the Lincoln case in the slightest degree.

It is abundantly clear that the statements I made, when read in their full context and against the background of the whole debate, related to the real issues that were there under discussion. There was nothing in that bill, and there is nothing in the law today, that would authorize, or legalize, or validate in any way, conspiracy to discriminate against the South, or the West, or any other part of the country. My statements were meant, and I am sure they were understood to mean, that there was nothing in that bill which would interfere with those suits in the slightest degree, in their purpose to enjoin a conspiracy to establish or maintain discriminatory freight rates.

A simple reading of the bill, which was then officially before every Member of the Senate, made it abundantly certain that the only agreements authorized by the bill were those which the Commission may expressly find to be in furtherance of the national transportation policy. Anyone with sufficient interest to read the opening paragraph of the Interstate Commerce Act may plainly see that a conspiracy to discriminate or an agreement which would promote or encourage unfair discrimination is contrary to and not in furtherance of that policy.

It is well to observe that there is not, and never has been, any confusion as to what that bill was intended to do. Its plain language leaves no room for doubt. In response to popular demand, clearly and eloquently expressed, and based on a half century of experience, the bill was passed by the overwhelming vote of Congress—by the votes of the majority of the Democrats and the majority of the Republicans. Its purpose was to make rate conferences in transportation legal, to give to the Interstate Commerce Commission the power and the duty to determine whether or not a proposed conference is "in furtherance of the national transportation policy," to place such conferences under the continuing regulation and supervision of the Commission, to remove any doubt about the validity of proper rate conferences and to prescribe means by which they could be preserved and regulated.

The legal effect of that legislation upon the pending suits has been the subject of differences of opinion. But those differences result not from doubt or confusion as to the intent of the legislation but from apparent confusion as to the purpose of the suits.

It is not the duty nor the responsibility of Congress or its Members to interpret the objectives of litigation pending in the courts. Those objectives are often obscure and the results are frequently at variance with the expectations of all the parties involved. But it is our duty to declare the national policy and to spell it out in laws that may be understood. Where there is need for clarification of policy or of the law, as was the occasion for the enactment of this bill, we are not obliged to await disaster nor to sit idly by awaiting action by the courts to interpret that which we may have said or to reconcile conflicting pronouncements we may have made in the past. By the enactment of that bill we made it clear that rate conferences between regulated carriers, when found by the Commission to be "in furtherance of the national transportation policy," are not to be considered as "conspiracies in restraint of trade" which we prohibited by the enactment of the antitrust laws; we designated the Interstate Commerce Commission as the body to determine whether or not proposed conferences are "in furtherance of" that policy; and we placed the conferences expressly found to be of that character under the continuing supervision of that Commission. The very fact of controversy as to the effect of that legislation upon the Lincoln suit and the Georgia case is further justification for the enactment of that bill at the time we passed it. By the adoption of the Reed-Bulwinkle bill we validated only that which is "in furtherance of the national transportation policy." If it was not the purpose of these suits to frustrate that policy, then they will not be affected by the legislation. As I have said, if the purpose of those suits was to enjoin conspiracy to fix or maintain a structure of freight rates which discriminate against any part of the country, the passage of the bill did not affect them, because the bill did not validate conspiracy to discriminate. If the Government proves charges of that character, the legislation would not give the carriers relief. On the other hand, if the real purpose of those suits was to declare illegal and to destroy rate conferences expressly found to be "in furtherance of the national transportation policy," then the language of the bill is clear and necessary.

INCREASED COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN FEDERAL OFFICERS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 103) to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and heads and assistant heads of executive departments and independent agencies.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I desire to speak briefly on the pending measure, Senate bill 103. I wish to address myself particularly in support of the very fine presentation made by the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] on the relationship of this bill and its proposals to the exceedingly important subject of economy in the administration of our Government.

The proposals of this bill constitute step No. 1 in the attainment of a greater and exceedingly necessary measure of economy in the operations of the Federal Government. Attention has been called again and again to the comparatively low rates of salary which are offered in Government administration, as compared with what the same degree of experience and ability can obtain under private business. In the proposals of this bill there is no endeavor to make the return to the individual official as great, for the experience and ability required, as the return which would be offered him or the return which he may have been getting under private employment. Mr. President, it is assumed that some degree of sacrifice is involved in working for the Federal Government, rather than in working for private business. However, this bill endeavors to make sure that the degree of sacrifice involved is not so great that it becomes impossible to hold the men of the required degree of experience and ability to carry on in an economical and effective way the enormous operations of the greatest big-business organization the world has ever seen, which, of course, is the administration of the Federal Government of the United States of America.

I said, and I wish to repeat, that this is the first step in any endeavor to cut down the expense of the operations of the United States Government. Without this first step, no second step can be taken.

The first requirement is that there shall be available for the administration of the various branches of the Government men who are able to handle, with experience, with good judgment, and with integrity, the billions of dollars which are involved—amounts far exceeding in total, and in many of the subdivisions of the total, any amounts handled by any private business undertakings whatsoever the world over. Any President, be he a Democrat or be he a Republican, will not only be handicapped, but will be hamstrung if he is unable to obtain the services of men of requisite qualities for the enormous responsibilities the President has had handed to him by the legislation enacted by the Congress and by the conditions of the world and of the country which he must consider.

I should also like to address myself to the question of why the bill before the Senate stops at the point where it does in going down from the top officials toward those who are lower. One practical point is involved, and that is that it was necessary to find a stopping place. There is one point at which a line of demarcation can clearly be drawn, and that is the point at which the line is drawn in this bill. It is drawn so as to include the heads of departments, the Cabinet members, who are the secretaries in charge of the various departments, the under secretaries, and the assistant secretaries, the heads of the independent bureaus, and the heads and members of the important independent commissions. That line can be drawn. It is not merely practical, in that it can be drawn; it is also logical, in that it includes practically everyone in the way of a policy-determining administrator for all the branches of the Government and all the undertakings of the Government. No one who has been working on this bill or who has supported this bill or understands this bill would for a moment say that it includes more than a fraction of those who are holding important positions, who have held them faithfully, who have done good work for the Government, and who in the months and years to come, throughout their tenure of office, can be expected to render to their Government service of which they can be proud and with which we can be satisfied.

It is not the intention in thus limiting the application of the bill to pick out this official or that official, or the other group of officials, and reward them on the basis of good service. The line is drawn, as I said, from the practical standpoint of there being a place at which to draw the line, and from the logical standpoint of including those on whom the ultimate responsibility must be fixed for the carrying out of the Federal governmental operations with which under the law they are charged. The work of arranging or providing adequate compensation extends then beyond the limits of the bill. There is very much more to be done, but it should be done in order.

I have in my hand a letter from the Director of the Bureau of the Budget, indicating the status of the studies of that branch of the Government on the question of adequate pay for the remainder of the salary list. It is addressed to the junior Senator from Maryland, and, with his permission, I shall read it:

MY DEAR SENATOR O'CONOR:

In response to your request concerning the status of recommendations for a revision of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, please be advised that within the next few days there will be transmitted to the Congress for its consideration a proposed draft of bill providing for a complete revision of that act.

I wish to say a word on another phase of the matter, that of having separated the top group for early action. It would be understandable, it would be without the bounds of any reasonable criticism that we should have done this in the Congress and have done it early, had the event of a new President transpired. As most of us know, that did not happen; we have the same President, and largely the same administration. However, the principles which would have applied to a new President in giving him the means of attracting and holding men of the great ability required to transact the business of the Nation hold, in only a slightly less degree, to the present incumbent, who holds over from last year, and whom we shall shortly inaugurate as the President of the United States. I say, "in only a slightly less degree," because there has been, and will continue to be, in the early months of his administration, a rather high degree of turn-over in top officials. We read in the newspapers that this Cabinet official and that Cabinet official and the other, and the head of this agency, the head of this administration or bureau, or what have you, is not going to resign, and then, within a short space of time, he resigns. I think we are all resigned to that perfectly practical situation. There is a turn-over at the beginning of a new administration. Who the officials will be, we do not know, but we do know that in order to get men of the requisite caliber in the first few months, whether the Chief Executive be Democrat or Republican, he must be assured that he has within his power the means of attracting and holding men of ability, and in particular, men who do not have large private means of their own, so that he will not have to search principally among the uncommonly well-to-do to find men of the type he wishes to employ.

Those are the reasons, Mr. President, on which I would support first the passage of the bill as a whole; and, second, the line which determines the particular group which the bill covers. But, thirdly, I want to refer to one other point in the bill which to my mind is overwhelmingly important from the standpoint of justice.

In the closing hours of the special session last year, we eliminated from the pay-bill increase for the civil-service employees, one large group. We did it because there were in sight at that time no funds with which to pay them. That very practical appeal was agreed to by the Members of the Senate. We left out every civil-service employee of the District of Columbia, and we gave the pay increase to every other civil-service employee the country over, with one exception.

I submit, Mr. President, that in spite of the budgetary situation involved, we should and must find the funds to bring civil-service employees in the most expensive city in the United States on a par with those in the other sections of the country.

Mr. CAIN. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOEY in the chair). Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. CAIN. I should like to ask the Senator how section 8 of the bill cures the distressing situation to which the Senator has just referred?

Mr. FLANDERS. It gives the $330 increase and makes it retroactive.

Mr. CAIN. To whom among the employees of the District of Columbia does it give the $330 increase?

Mr. FLANDERS. It gives it to those in the classified service.

Mr. CAIN. I may ask the Senator, for I think it is a very fair and important question, what provisions are to be made for the unclassified workers of the District of Columbia, who outnumber by several thousand the classified workers?

Mr. FLANDERS. I may say to the junior Senator from Washington that I would expect that question to fall within the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia. It does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Committee which reported the pending bill.

Mr. CAIN. I am very conscious of that fact, but I wondered what would result administratively within the District of Columbia if, through the passage of section 8 of Senate bill 103, we provided a retroactive increase in salary for 7,000 workers, leaving 11,000, working side by side with them, without a penny by way of a pay increase.

Mr. FLANDERS. Those salaries, as between the classified employees and those directly under the jurisdiction of the District Committee, have always been handled separately. In evidence thereof, I should like to call the attention of the junior Senator from Washington to the fact that in 1947, I believe it was, the salaries of a large number of those under the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia were raised without raising the salaries of those under the classified service.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, it is quite true that school teachers, who are unclassified workers, were given increases to make up for the fact that previously they had not been given increases commensurate with those given to other employees. But may I ask the Senator this question? In view of the fact that there are 18,000 employees of the District of Columbia, would it not be much better, from every point of view, particularly because the Senate has already given evidence of its wish to make any pay increase retroactive, to handle the problem of the 18,000 employees at one time, rather than to take a specialized group of 7,000, increase their wages at this time, and leave for some future action the rights of 11,000 other employees?

Mr. FLANDERS. I would say to the Senator from Washington that, so far as I am concerned, I can only feel and act on a responsibility to which I am committed by my position on the committee.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I thoroughly appreciate the responsibility which confronts the Senator from Vermont, but our concern for the District of Columbia, the Capital City of the Nation, the only Federal city in the United States, gives to both of us an over-all responsibility which certainly extends beyond the confines or limits of a particular committee responsibility.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I would accept that extension of responsibility which the Senator has so plainly and logically indicated. I find my refuge in an ancient Latin proverb which I endeavored to give in Latin on the floor of the Senate at one time and concerning which I had to be corrected by the erudite reportorial force. I shall not now endeavor to give it in Latin; I shall give it in plain English:

Let justice be done though the heavens fall.

That, it seems to me, is properly applicable to this situation. I would therefore suggest that we proceed with remedying the injustice and that the members of the District Committee proceed as rapidly as possible with any other adjustments which may have to be made.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont and I differ in this instance only on the interpretation and definition of what justice really is. I think that, to be just to the problem confronting us with reference to the District of Columbia, we have a very high obligation to do no less for one segment of the workers of this grand community than we are willing, at the same time, to do for any other segment.

Aside from that, may I inquire of the Senator from Vermont where the money—we are all interested in money—is coming from to meet this obligation to pay the classified workers retroactively a $330 increase?

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, with regard to that question, I would defer to any suggestions, any legislation, which may come before the Committee on the District of Columbia. I wish to assure the Senator that so far as the Senator from Vermont is concerned, any reasonable endeavor to meet these moral obligations of the United States of America will have my support.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I think that is very important to the future. Certainly the heads of the government of the city of Washington would be very grateful. But I should like to inquire whether there have been before the Senate within recent months reasonable revenue-raising measures which, if passed, would have met the obligation with money in hand some time ago? It is far different today. The Senator is very well aware that we are proposing to pay out money which we do not happen to have in sight. May I ask, if it be a fair question, whether or not Congress has met its responsibility both in raising revenues, and in deciding to whom those revenues will be given?

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, so far as the arrears are concerned, and, I believe, so far as the fiscal year is concerned, the President's budget recently submitted to Congress has in it provisions for the extension of $330 to which reference has been made.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I do not care to labor the point, but if the Senator will permit me, I want to urge that it is important. The President submitted a budget of $103,000,000 for the District of Columbia, the largest budget ever dreamed of by this community. It is a balanced budget—balanced on two assumptions, both of which are likely to turn out to be completely meaningless. In order to balance the budget, the first assumption the President made was that a sales tax to provide $13,000,000 would be passed. The Senate has not passed a sales tax, nor has the Congress. Such a measure was before us last year, but it was filibustered. The second assumption of the President in the $103,000,000 budget for the District of Columbia was that no consideration would be given to retroactively paying employees of the community $330, nor would the $330 increase be included in the 1950 provision for the District of Columbia employees. The basic question I raise is, How far can we go, either in or out of the District of Columbia, in passing legislation which obviously is intended to help people, without having the faintest or slightest idea as to the source of the money?

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I wanted to call the attention of the Senate to one other piece of injustice which has occurred, by inadvertence, through inability to see where the money was coming from, to which the Senator from Washington has so logically referred, without, however, I believe, trying to indicate that injustice should not be remedied, if possible, somehow and somewhere.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, may I inquire as to how we are going to remedy it in the face of a lack of revenue with which to meet the obligation we intend to incur?

Mr. FLANDERS. I should gladly appear before the Appropriations Committee and ask that the money be appropriated from the funds of the Government, if there is no other way to do it.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, does that mean that, from the Senator's point of view, we should ignore and pass over the possibility of meeting the obligation through the imposition of a sales tax similar to that which already has been passed by most of the States of the Union, or at least by quite a number of them?

Mr. FLANDERS. I said, if there were no other way.

Mr. CAIN. Does the Senator consider that the sales tax is a reasonable way by which to meet the responsibility?

Mr. FLANDERS. The sales tax certainly is a reasonable way. It is one which has been tried in other places. I shall want to balance it against other possibilities before I commit myself to it.

Mr. CAIN. Does the Senator from Vermont think that the requirements of the situation demand that before we give consideration to proper methods for financing the District of Columbia and its obligations we should meet such obligations without the money in hand?

Mr. FLANDERS. I believe that we should do that first. The Senator has stated my position very clearly. It should not be taken out of the employees. The responsibility lies with the Congress, and it should not be taken out of the income of those who are working at comparatively low salaries in the most expensive city in the United States.

Mr. CAIN. Yet one fact, I think, is rather obvious, that during the debates in the closing days of the last Congress it was agreed by the Congress in an informal fashion, but I think a very proper one, that when moneys were found—which called for a complete restudy and reappraisal of the whole awkward, bad financial situation in the District—they would apply retroactively to the salaries of District employees, both classified, as the Senator from Vermont has referred to them, and unclassified, as well, to which the junior Senator from Washington and a good many other Senators have referred in times gone by.

I raise only that question, as to whether it is not proper, in the name of good government and sound financing, for those who know that when the problem is solved they will be taken care of, through retroactive salary increases, to wait a reasonable length of time, and place the responsibility for reasonableness on this Congress, until a solution which makes good, hard-headed, common sense can be found by the Congress.

Mr. FLANDERS. My memory may fail me, it does in many situations and as to many matters, but I should be very much surprised to find that the record showed that I voted to postpone that obligation.

Mr. CAIN. There was no personal reference by the junior Senator from Washington to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. I understand that, but I am merely indicating to the Senator from Washington that that argument did not appeal to me particularly at that time. I think we have incurred an obligation, which we are bound to make good at the earliest possible moment, to these men and women—again, I say, in the most expensive city in the United States.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, will the Senator agree with me that one of the reasons why this is "the most expensive city in the United States," to use the Senator's words, is because on too many occasions we create obligations without first having determined how we are going to finance them, and in consequence we move too rapidly toward the attainment of our otherwise acknowledgedly good goals?

Mr. FLANDERS. That, I submit, is a proposition to be proved, not simply to be stated.

Mr. CAIN. I thank the Senator. I should like to ask one last question, with the Senator's permission. Assume we pass this provision, which says the classified workers shall get an increase, to which I for one, and everyone else in this Chamber, I know, says they are entitled, then it necessarily follows, in the Senator's words and mine, and those of others, that we must give comparable consideration to unclassified workers. If we take such action, we are going to create a deficit of approximately $10,000,000 beyond and above what we have now for the District of Columbia, which has its gigantic and largest budget of $103,000,000. Where is that money to come from? We have not met the issue of a sales tax head-on. We are going to take the easy way out.

The question I wish to ask the Senator is this: Does not the passage of this legislation, as proposed, mean that we are likely to continue to avoid a full discussion of the sales tax, in favor of taking these moneys from the only other available source, namely, the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. FLANDERS. First, as to the amount involved, so far as the classified service is concerned it amounts to about two and one-half million dollars a year, retroactively, for approximately 6 months, which would mean $1,250,000. The Senator from Washington can say in a very much more informed and clearer manner than I can what he would assume to be the necessary adjustments in other salaries, involving the expenditure mentioned to go along with the proposed action, which has been taken following the line of the jurisdiction of the committee.

Mr. CAIN. Yesterday I called up Mr. Fowler, the budget officer of the District, and I found that the $330 obligation, which we are considering for the classified workers, in accordance with the budget which the President recently sent to Congress would amount, for 7,000 workers, to $2,208,000 plus. If we gave the same consideration to the 11,000 unclassified workers, the cost would be $3,077,000. So we are talking about a total obligation in the future, to meet these increases of more than $5,000,000, in addition to what the retroactive amounts would actually cost.

I am very grateful to the Senator from Vermont for the light which he has shed on a difficult subject. I know I have not been misunderstood in my questions. I am completely satisfied that we share the same desire, namely, to be of service to the workers of the District of Columbia. I have merely maintained, and very seriously, too, that by setting precedents of this character in securing wage increases, we shall in due time be doing a great disservice not only to the workers of the District of Columbia, but to the average, ordinary American taxpayer as well.

Mr. FLANDERS. I wish to say, in return, if the Senator from Washington does not mind, that his material has given me food for thought, but with the overriding necessity for justice still in my mind, and I am sure he still understands that.

There is one other group which was left out, by inadvertence, in the bill which we passed in the closing hours of the Eightieth Congress, namely, those in the classified service under the Foreign Service Act. They are certainly as much entitled to an increase as were the other members of the classified service to whom an increase was granted. So in the final section of the bill, in order to remedy that inadvertent injustice, we ask that they be included in the $330 raise, again retroactively.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. During the time the distinguished Senator from Vermont and myself were on the committee together we worked along very well, and I wish to ask the Senator now whether he thinks that under his Latin proverb, which he gave in English a few moments ago, it would be just to pick only 223 out of 3,107 employees who are getting $9,975 a year?

Mr. FLANDERS. I think there are two things to be said with regard to that. In the first place, this is not a cost-of-living bill. This is a practical bill, designed to procure and retain the very highest ability that can be attracted to the Government service for the most important jobs.

Mr. LANGER. Would the distinguished Senator say that at the present time we do not have them?

Mr. FLANDERS. There have been certain times and with reference to certain positions when the junior Senator from Vermont was in a pessimistic state of mind, when he wondered whether in all cases we did have such men.

Mr. LANGER. Let me ask the distinguished Senator, then, if he thinks that raising certain salaries to $22,500 and others to lesser amounts will make it possible to attract such men, like those on the long list the Senator mentions in the report, for example, the head of the United States Rubber Co., who receives $300,000 a year. Does the Senator expect to attract men of that caliber to Government service?

Mr. FLANDERS. Let me say to the Senator from North Dakota that I have not the slightest idea whether the president of the United States Rubber Co. would make a good government official. I think he would last about 2 weeks, blow up, and buy a ticket home. But there are men farther down the line, still earning salaries higher than any that is proposed to be paid in the bill, who might be more useful than the president of the United States Rubber Co.—and I am saying nothing against him, I want that clearly understood—men who have had experience in dealing with widespread details and organizing those under them, who might be persuaded to enter the Federal service at salaries considerably below those now being paid them.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I have no desire to prolong the discussion. Has the Senator had any agreement with the majority as to when action shall be taken with respect to the remainder of the 3,107, if we pass the bill providing for the 223?

Mr. FLANDERS. There is no agreement on the part of the members of the committee with the majority. I did read a letter from the Bureau of the Budget—I think I read it while the Senator from North Dakota was absent from the floor—in which the writer said that the Bureau of the Budget was prepared to report and would very shortly report its recommendations for the full salary list.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont a further question. The Senator was chairman of the committee which acted during the last night of the Eightieth Congress, when the matter of the last pay increase was taken up jointly with the House. Is that not true?

Mr. FLANDERS. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. At that time the bill as it was reported by the Senate committee, and acted upon in the Senate, contained the Reclassification Act. Is that not true?

Mr. FLANDERS. Yes.

Mr. LANGER. Did not at that time the House Members say that if that were left out, and the bill as it was, without the Reclassification Act, were passed, they would immediately get together in the next 6 or 7 months and prepare a complete reclassification measure? Did the Members of the House not promise that?

Mr. FLANDERS. They promised that. Of course, technically one House cannot promise anything for another. The House does not hold over as the Senate does. But I am sure the Senator from North Dakota will be glad to know that the information is that they are now working on that bill as promised by the members with whom we dealt in that joint committee.

Mr. LANGER. Then may I ask, why would it not be just, right, and proper to wait until that report is made, and then at that time to take up the entire question of all the employees in one bill, rather than do it piecemeal the way we have been doing in the past 6 or 7 years?

Mr. FLANDERS. I may say to the Senator from North Dakota that I have tried to give my reasons for feeling that this top group should have the earliest possible action so that in the early weeks of this administration the President may be free to make such changes in the top group as he deems wise. In that regard I feel the members of the minority party have a particular responsibility for giving the President those means, so that there shall not rest on them at least one scintilla of responsibility for any maladministration in any remote nook and corner of the administration of the opposite party.

Mr. LANGER. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Vermont in conclusion that if the Senator's theory is correct, and if that is the reason why the Senator is in favor of the pending bill, then the Democratic Party, the party of the Members on the other side of the aisle has been negligent in the past 16 years in not taking care of the Federal employees. Does the Senator agree with that statement?

Mr. FLANDERS. I will say to the distinguished Senator that I agree with practically anything on principle that expresses doubt as to the complete wisdom of the action of our friends on the other side of the aisle, and we can only hope that now and in the future they will show a higher degree of wisdom.

I might read from a letter sent to the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, on January 6, from the President, this concluding paragraph:

> On January 20 a new Presidential term will begin. During that term the executive branch of the Government will be called upon to bear responsibilities of great magnitude. Prompt action on this bill is of great importance to me in strengthening the management of the executive branch to meet these responsibilities. Its small cost will be repaid many times. I ask the Congress to give me the means of making it possible to get and keep the men who are required for the job ahead.

A Republican President entering upon a new administration would very properly have written the same message to the heads of the two Houses here in the Capitol, and whether he be a Republican or whether he be a Democrat, I think we have the responsibility for upholding him upon this matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate with amendments.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to Senate bill 103 and ask only that it be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 8 it is proposed to strike out subsection (a) of section 8.

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF PURDUE UNIVERSITY—AWARD TO WALT DISNEY

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, on the 15th day of this month that great Hoosier institution, Purdue University, at Lafayette, Ind., will celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary.

Needless to say, suitable ceremonies have been planned for this memorable occasion. Proper tribute will be paid then to one of the Nation's outstanding symbols of progress.

At the same time, the university will pay tribute to another symbol of Americanism. It will present its distinguished service award to Walt Disney and declare him an honorary member of its alumni association.

These happy events combine to make this an occasion not only of great interest but of great significance. It can truly be said that it is world-wide in both interest and significance.

We of Indiana, Mr. President, are justly proud of Purdue. As one of the greatest of all institutions for education, it has greatly contributed to the leadership of America in the world and it has enriched the world itself.

In the professions for which Purdue prepares its students it has exacting standards. It is no less exacting in its selection of those who receive its distinguished-service award.

This award is not come by lightly. It has been awarded only twice before, and Walt Disney is the first American to be accorded this unique and distinguished honor.

He is only the second man to be made an honorary member of the Alumni Association of Purdue University, being preceded only by the immortal Will Rogers.

Mr. President, I am certain that my colleague [Mr. JENNER] and the other Members of the Indiana delegation in the House of Representatives, join me in this tribute to Purdue and to its worthy choice for one of its highest honors.

Walt Disney is a living example of the creative spirit which has made America great. As with all true artists, he blends inspiration and imagination with precisionist technique.

Mr. Disney has created a beloved character that has become a friend of all the world—the enchanting, beguiling little sprite of the inkwell, Mickey Mouse.

Known in every country, I believe Mickey Mouse is destined to live forever with other immortals of tradition, song, and story, such as Columbine and Pantaloon, Santa Claus and Robin Hood.

Mr. President, we of the Indiana delegation to the United States Congress believe that the words of citation which will be delivered to Walt Disney by Purdue University are apt and perfect tribute to him. That citation reads:

To Walt Disney, artist, producer, director, and creator, but above all, welder of the arts of painting, music, and the drama into a new unity that has made a world public sensitive to the values inherent in motion pictures, Purdue presents this citation to show its recognition of his effectiveness in bringing pleasure to a humanity that needs a healing power of laughter and beauty.

ISRAEL AND GREAT BRITAIN

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, later this afternoon I shall have a few remarks to make in regard to an amendment to the pay bill, in the form of a bill which now is being prepared, but at this time I wish to address myself to an entirely different subject.

The other day five Royal Air Force fighters and bombers were shot down—some on Israeli territory and some on the Israeli-Egyptian border. There has been an angry reaction on the part of Great Britain, but it is fair to ask the question, "What were British planes doing over that area, anyway?" They had, in my opinion, as little right to be flying over the battlefield in Israel and Egypt as they would have had to be flying over Long Island. The act of the British Government in sending planes to that area was a deliberate and provocative one. Even the kindest interpretation must see it as a provocative act. The British Foreign Office asserts that the planes, though armed, were under orders not to shoot, and were sent only for reconnaissance. But I ask, What were armed planes doing in an area in which they had no business to be—an area thrice delicate by the conflict in which it was involved?

Reconnaissance in military science is recognized as a military activity. It is not a harmless act.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I do not care to yield until I finish my remarks, and then I shall be glad to yield.

Reconnaissance, as every military man knows, is the first phase of attack, and is thus recognized. If Mr. Bevin is now seeking an incident, he chose no better method than to send armed fighter planes of the RAF over an area in which the forces of another country lie waiting with antiaircraft guns to defend their soil against aggression.

Mr. President, there is no doubt that today we are witnessing a war of nerves in the Middle East. What we are seeing is a definite, deliberate, and consistent British attempt to force their way into the Jewish-Arab conflict. It is the more reprehensible because that conflict seems well on its way toward resolution. United Nations representatives are holding peace talks in Rhodes between Egyptians and Israelis. A truce has been achieved on the once-bloody Israeli-Transjordan front. Peace—and ultimate stabilization—are coming more and more into view, day by day.

This is the moment when the great powers of the world should be studiously correct and most circumspect in every word and in every act which might tend to disturb the delicate equilibrium now reached in the Middle East.

Yet this is the moment when Great Britain chooses to send British troops into the port of Aqaba, in Transjordan, just across the border from Israel; to land British fighting planes at Mafrak, Transjordan; to reassemble her naval forces in the Middle East; to announce that they are taking precautionary measures likely to deter any aggressive intentions that the Jews might have; and to send armed planes over Israeli territory.

It is certainly subject to suspicion, to say the least, that Mr. Bevin's real intent is to precipitate a major crisis in the Middle East; to throw a ring of armed might around Israel; and thus finally to demand that the new state acquiesce to those designs for its suicide which Mr. Bevin was unable to sell the Anglo-American Committee of Inquiry on Palestine in 1946, the United Nations Special Committee on Palestine in 1947, and the United Nations itself in 1948.

I am not alone, Mr. President, in criticizing Mr. Bevin. I find myself in a goodly company each time I do so. Only recently, Mr. Winston Churchill and Mr. Anthony Eden, speaking in the House of Commons, demanded to know—as I ask today—why the RAF was sticking its nose into a territory in which it had no business.

The Manchester Guardian, on Monday morning, said bluntly:

Mr. Bevin is taking perilous and needless risks in the Middle East. * * * His policy is making fools of us and is in danger of doing worse.

Mr. President, this country has a very profound stake in a stabilized Middle East. Through the past years American foreign policy has aimed at achieving a measure of stability in Palestine and the surrounding Arab states. It has been a matter for congressional resolutions and for Presidential statements. It has been part of our major party platforms. The issues have been discussed and debated, and have been the subject of innumerable analyses and investigations by committees and by the United Nations itself.

If that stability now, at last, appears on the horizon, every responsible power should do all in its ability, and use every resource at its command, to encourage the cessation of hostilities and the arrival of peace. Mr. President, sending fighter and bomber planes over Israel is not the way to promote peace.

I maintain that we are well tired of war and the alarms of war in that unhappy corner of the world, and that long ago there would have been peace were it not for the interference of Great Britain. Today, even though Britain has presumably washed her hands of the Palestine issue, having turned it over to the United Nations, it is obvious that Britain is very much an upsetting factor in the problem.

It is fear of British armed intervention which today halts every peace move in the Middle East. This fear makes for ill will among both Israelis and Arabs. It strengthens those Arab leaders who stand for intransigeance. It weakens those Israeli leaders who seek genuine peace. It keeps the entire situation in flux, and makes fools, not only of the British, to quote the Manchester Guardian's words, but it makes fools of all who attempt to achieve a final agreement between the warring parties.

To our own people I say: Upon us devolves the important task of making clear to Mr. Bevin and those few British ministers, if any, who support his bitter, provocative policy, that this Government will not ignore what has happened.

We are pledged to support Israel's territorial integrity. We are pledged to support the United Nations decision which gave that territory to Israel. We cannot remain unaware of this war of nerves, which may develop into a far more serious matter, and which threatens to upset every constructive step taken thus far in the long, arduous road toward Middle East peace. Nor can we permit the British, through Mr. Bevin, to make fools of the United Nations itself.

Let us say, clearly and without subterfuge: "This is far enough, Mr. Bevin. You have failed in 3 years of intrigue and war against the Jewish people in Palestine. Your policies have not been endorsed either by the British people as a whole, or by the community of nations at large. Thus far, and no further. Our interest in peace, our stake in Middle East stability, is too grave for us to allow you to jeopardize all that has been achieved so far."

As one Member of this body, Mr. President, those are my views and that is my answer to Mr. Bevin.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I should like first to comment on what the Senator from Oregon has said, and to ask him whether he is aware that this morning the British authorities have issued a statement attributing a portion of the responsibility for the reconnaissance to the United States. I read the dispatch which has just come over the cables or radio from London:

British authorities reported that scouting planes were sent over the Egyptian-Israeli battle front only after talks with the United States made clear to both sides an urgent need for precise information on Jewish invasions of Egypt.

Five British planes were shot down in the frontier area last Friday.

British authorities said they initiated the use of reconnaissance planes in the battle zone after Anglo-American conversations in Washington at the end of the year.

At that time, it was said at the Foreign Office, the need for word on the extent of Israeli incursions into Egypt was clear to both sides. As such information could not be had from United Nations sources, British authorities used the only means of obtaining information—aerial reconnaissance.

I ask the Senator from Oregon whether he feels that we should be backed into intervention of this character through casual conversations such as are indicated in the report now issued to the public by the British Foreign Office?

Mr. MORSE. I can say to my good friend from Maine that if the British report is true as to such American conversations, then of course those conversations were carried on clearly outside the framework of United Nations procedure.

Mr. BREWSTER. Precisely.

Mr. MORSE. If we have any Americans in the State Department or Foreign Service who are conducting any such conversations as the Senator has mentioned, then it is high time, in my judgment, that the Foreign Relations Committee of the United States Senate should proceed with a thorough investigation as to the policies of the State Department in operating outside the framework of the United Nations.

In fact, I may say, in view of the trends which have taken place recently in the Senate of the United States, in respect to an undermining of a bipartisan foreign policy, I think it has now become incumbent upon many of us in the Senate to center greater and greater attention on the State Department in regard to its foreign policy, because I think the time has now come when he must make perfectly clear to the people of the United States that there is a group in the Senate who recognize that bipartisan foreign policy in America has become nothing but a name, and that it is now incumbent upon us to find out what the policies of the State Department are, by whatever Senate investigations may be necessary.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think it should be clear that there is nothing in the statement to indicate, and I should certainly be most reluctant to believe, that anyone in the Senate of the United States was consulted in action being taken of the sort indicated here, although if the conversations were sufficient to warrant the British in carrying aerial reconnaissance of that character over the country now in possession of the Israeli Government, which we have ourselves recognized de facto, it certainly would be a most unfriendly and most unwarranted act, particularly when it required the superseding of the authority of the United Nations, which is now so obviously involved. I say this in all deference to the one who, more than anyone else perhaps in this body, was responsible for the development and evolution of the United Nations as a means of stabilizing the peace of all the world. Not until there is clearer evidence than is presented here, shall I believe that any Member of the Senate was in any way involved or responsible for the action which the British Government alleges it took upon warrant of conversations with individuals apparently in our State Department.

NECESSITY FOR ECONOMY IN FEDERAL EXPENDITURES—BRITISH ACTIVITIES IN MIDDLE EAST

Mr. President, the budget message recently received by this body from the President of the United States places on our shoulders a tremendous responsibility. The expenditures recommended by the President cannot be incurred without either raising the national debt, even beyond its present staggering height, or further increasing the heavy load of taxation with which individuals and business enterprises in this country are burdened.

In the circumstances, and before agreeing to either of these two serious alternatives, it is our duty to consider most carefully whether it is not possible to reduce the budget on the expenditure side here and there without threatening the essential needs and interests of the United States. The main purposes toward which these expenditures are directed cannot, of course, be questioned. The day-to-day functioning of all branches of the United States Government must be assured. A certain minimum of social services and of expenditures seeking to maintain the American people on a high level of prosperity must by all means be continued, perhaps even, in some instances, increased. Our obligations to pay the interest and part of the principal of the national debt are beyond doubt. In the present international situation an adequate budget for national defense is essential. For the same reason, as well as in order to insure the return of economic stability in the world, a certain measure of economic aid to friendly foreign countries may well be desirable.

And, yet, we have no alternative but to scan closely and carefully each one of these items in order to see whether we cannot reduce them without jeopardizing the general purpose of these expenditures. In doing so, we must look at the evidence and try to find out whether there is anywhere an indication that our moneys are being spent carelessly or for purposes with which our Government is not in accord. Wherever we find such evidence, it is our obligation to the people of the United States to reduce such expenditures, before calling on the American people for greater sacrifices in the form of increased taxation or a heavier national debt burden.

Reserving to myself the right to bring up at a later time other items where such reductions may be possible, I want to suggest today that, judging from recent events, we might well be justified in recommending a considerable decrease in this country's economic aid to Great Britain. As is well known, Britain is the principal beneficiary of the European economic-aid program and is scheduled to remain the principal beneficiary for some time to come. Several billion dollars—billions and not millions—have been and are being placed at the disposal of the British Government for various purposes. A considerable portion of these billions is to be spent in the coming year. It is clear that if any important saving can be attained in this item, a great deal would be achieved toward our purpose of balancing the budget at a lower figure and toward easing the burden on the taxpayers of America.

Now the purposes for which our economic aid is granted to Great Britain are manifold. We want to help the people of Britain who suffered so much destruction and deprivation during the war to get on their feet economically and otherwise. We are doing this because of our deep sympathy for and our traditional kinship with a people with whom we have so much in common. We are also doing it because Britain is one of the principal centers of world trade and an important customer of this country. Anything that will help the British achieve economic prosperity will be a step in the direction of world economic stability and may well contribute to the maintenance of prosperity in America as well. Furthermore, we regard the people of Britain as one of the mainstays of our western way of life, and anything that will strengthen the internal structure of Britain will help maintain successfully our common traditions against the forces which now seek their overthrow.

But the very fact that both the Government of the United States and the British Government believe it necessary to invoke American economic aid for those purposes shows their belief that Britain, even when straining and exercising every effort, cannot achieve them by its own means. Surely the British people would have been too proud to ask for our assistance if they could pull themselves out of their present economic difficulties without it. And surely our Government could not justify to the American people the sending of tremendous amounts of money and goods to Britain if Britain were able to achieve the purposes mentioned above without such aid. Of course, if Britain is shown to be able to spend large amounts of money on capricious military and diplomatic adventures, this can be taken as prima facie proof that its need for help in connection with its most basic requirements must be exaggerated.

I refer to recent newspaper accounts of British military and diplomatic activity in connection with Palestine. I am not concerned at the moment with the political justification which may or may not exist for these activities. Personally, I think that these activities are quite unjustified, most provocative, likely to threaten the peace, indicate a contempt for the United Nations, and show a rather arrogant determination by the British Government to set its own will above the will of the international community. From reports in the newspapers, I gather that the Government of the United States is inclined to view these activities in a somewhat similar light.

I say that in spite of the report of the British Foreign Office this morning attributing to their conversations with the United States State Department the responsibilities for the aerial reconnaissance by the British planes which were shot down, which I find it is very difficult to believe. I do not see any warrant for such action.

But Great Britain is an independent and sovereign country, and far be it from us to suggest that the Congress of the United States should attempt to tell the British Government what to do or what not to do.

But there is one side of the issue with which the Congress of the United States is fully competent to deal. Not only is it competent to deal with this issue, but the Congress of the United States, in my judgment, is under a duty to the American people to deal with this aspect. The question I have in mind is as follows: If the Government of Great Britain can afford to spend its own resources for military and diplomatic adventures of that kind—and from all we know they must be fairly expensive adventures—can it be said that the British Government is as badly in need of our economic assistance as we have been led to believe?

From evidence on hand, there would seem much reason to believe that the answer should be in the negative. I am inclined to believe that if the British Government is in a position to squander its resources on an attempt to intervene in the conflict between Arabs and Jews, that Government must be able to get along without economic help from us or, at any rate, with a much reduced amount of American aid. I suggest that the appropriate committees of the Senate review most carefully the expenditures proposed for American aid to Britain in the light of this situation.

I understand that there may arise an even more direct connection between American aid to Britain and current British activities in the Middle East. I understand that there is some question about Britain using in its military adventure in the Middle East airplanes placed at Britain's disposal under the American-aid program, tanks and guns and other military supplies procured in America or with funds coming from our economic-aid program.

I might say that in the disposal of war surplus at the end of the war vast stores of American military equipment were turned over to the British in the Middle East. The disposition of those stores in connection with the current problem is something to which I trust the appropriate committees of the Senate will give their very careful attention in the tense months or moments which are obviously ahead.

I trust that the appropriate committees of the Senate will investigate this question most thoroughly, for not for a moment do I believe that the Congress had intended to send funds and supplies to Britain with a view to their use in a threatened war against the tiny State of Israel.

But even if this is not found to be a fact, it would fail to satisfy me, and I suggest it should fail to satisfy the United States Congress. It does not matter whether the man to whom I give a dollar bill and a piece of iron pipe for his own needs uses that same dollar bill and that same piece of iron pipe to attack a third party for his own selfish reasons, or whether he uses in his attack a different dollar bill and a different piece of iron pipe which he had lying in his closet all along. What is important is that because he received aid from me he is in a position to use part of his own resources in an attack which he might not have been able to mount if I had not subsidized him. I submit, Mr. President, that a profligate use of funds for an unnecessarily aggressive policy by a government which is the recipient of so many billions of American economic aid places upon us squarely the responsibility for reexamining our expenditure under that item.

Mr. BREWSTER subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of the remarks which I made earlier in the day, dealing with events overseas, an item reported in the Washington Evening Star of today, under an Associated Press date line from London, dealing with the Palestine situation. It should be in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks. It points out the extent to which oil is a factor in our difficulties in Palestine and the Middle East.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BRITAIN MOVES FOR UNITED STATES ACCORD ON SETTLING PALESTINE CONFLICT; ENVOY TO CALL ON TRUMAN TODAY—FRANKS IS REPORTED ORDERED TO STATE STAND ON ISRAEL

LONDON, January 13.—The Foreign Office announced British Ambassador Sir Oliver Franks will see President Truman today in a meeting apparently aimed at patching up deepening British-American differences over Palestine.

(The White House disclosed that Franks was on the calling list to see the President at 10:30 o'clock this morning.)

A Foreign Office spokesman said Franks will seek to "make plain the attitude of His Majesty's Government, and to learn further the attitude of the American Government, in the hope that the two countries can cooperate" in settling the Holy Land conflict.

INSTRUCTIONS REPORTED GIVEN

An informed diplomatic source said Franks has received instructions from Foreign Secretary Bevin since yesterday's 4-hour-long British Cabinet session telling him to make these points to President Truman:

1. Britain regards the Jews as the aggressors in the present phase of the Palestine war.

2. Britain feels that unless Jews and Arabs get a settlement the "security, tranquillity, peace" of the Middle East will remain upset, with results that can only benefit communism.

3. Britain will regard a Jewish attack on the Red Sea port of Aqaba, or on any other part of Transjordan, as an attack on itself, now that King Abdullah has invoked the British-Transjordan mutual defense treaty.

4. Britain does not intend to suspend the precautionary measures it has taken in the conflict area. (This includes alerting of naval units in East Mediterranean bases, dispatch of British troops to Aqaba, placing of RAF airfields in the Suez Canal zone of Egypt on a war-preparedness basis.)

EDEN FEARS BREAK

Earlier, Anthony Eden, the Conservative spokesman, expressed fear of a British-American break over Palestine, and termed Mr. Bevin's handling of middle eastern affairs confused.

Mr. Eden declared in a political talk at Warwick last night the British Labor government and the State Department must share the blame "for failure either to declare a firm policy or take a firm line."

"I have long been anxious lest these Palestinian events should imperil Anglo-American friendship," said the man who was wartime Foreign Secretary under Winston Churchill and is second only to Mr. Churchill in the Conservative Party leadership. "Surely the time has now come when a supreme effort must be made to agree on an Anglo-American policy and carry it out."

PLANE ATTACK HELD UNWARRANTED

Mr. Eden said the destruction of five British planes by Israeli forces during a battle between Jews and Arabs on the Palestine-Egyptian border last Friday was an unwarranted and aggressive act.

But he added:

"Why were our aircraft sent to carry out a reconnaissance over battle areas in such conditions?

"What useful British purpose could the flight be held to serve?"

Those were a sample of the questions expected to be asked Mr. Bevin by both Conservative and Laborite critics when Parliament meets again next week. It resumes sessions Tuesday.

A Labor Member of Parliament, W. N. Warbey, told a Jewish Sccialist Party gathering in London the British-Israeli tension grew out of "the great irresponsibility of British authorities in sending military aircraft into the battle area."

Another view was emphasized in the Daily Express, an independent imperialist newspaper. It said Britain must give everybody notice she is not a lodger, but one of the landlords in the Middle East.

PRIMARY INTEREST IN OIL

Aside from defense, a primary British interest is access to middle eastern oil. This asset was emphasized in the prediction of Egyptian Government officials in Cairo yesterday that the Sinai Desert area east of the Suez Canal will become one of the richest oil-producing regions in the world.

A prospecting well drilled by Socony Vacuum not far from Sidri came into production this week. Government officials estimated the new field will yield 5,000 tons of petroleum a day. This is more than the daily production of all Egyptian fields in 1946.

The Negeb Desert of Palestine, focal point of recent Israeli-Egyptian fighting, juts down like an arrowhead toward the Red Sea between Egypt's Sinai Desert and Transjordan. The Negeb, which the United Nations partition plan assigned to the Jews, is believed to have oil possibilities.

OLD CAMPS REFURBISHED

Just off the tip of the Negeb arrowhead British troops are refurbishing old camps, digging trenches, and consolidating their positions in Aqaba. Transjordan, like Egypt, an Arab foe of Israel, called for the troops under terms of her mutual-aid treaty with Britain. Israel protested to the United Nations against this and other British activity. Security Council delegates have side-stepped a direct show-down.

"I do not think we will initiate any incursions or start hostilities," a senior regimental officer said, "but we will not allow anybody to approach Aqaba or attack our forces."

INCREASED COMPENSATION FOR CERTAIN FEDERAL OFFICERS

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, as stated immediately before the quorum call, I desire to be heard on the amendments which I have sent to the desk, and I respectfully request that the clerk read them for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read the amendments.

Mr. DONNELL. I suggest that the clerk read the amendment pertaining to the President first, then the one with respect to the Vice President, and then the one with respect to the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 1 it is proposed to strike out lines 6, 7, and 8, and on page 2, to strike out lines 1 to 8, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 102. The President shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected compensation of $100,000 a year, to be paid in equal monthly installments, and an annual allowance of not to exceed $50,000 for defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which allowance no tax liability shall accrue and for which an accounting shall be made by him, and which allowance shall be payable in monthly installments on vouchers duly presented. He shall be entitled also to the use of the furniture and other effects belonging to the United States and kept in the Executive Mansion.

On page 2 it is proposed to strike out lines 17 to 22, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 111. There shall be paid to the Vice President an expense allowance of not to exceed $10,000 per annum for defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which allowance no tax liability shall accrue, and for which an accounting shall be made by him, and which allowance shall be payable in monthly installments on vouchers duly presented.

On page 3 it is proposed to strike out lines 3 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(e) There shall be paid to the Speaker of the House of Representatives an expense allowance of not to exceed $10,000 per annum (which shall be in lieu of the allowance provided by sec. 601 (b), Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended) for defraying expenses to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which allowance no tax liability shall accrue, and for which an accounting shall be made by him, and which allowance shall be payable in monthly installments on vouchers duly presented.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. May I inquire of the Chair just what is now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments were simply read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the President pro tempore.

Mr. DONNELL. The three amendments which have just been read by the clerk, and which have been presented on behalf of the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and myself, are based on the premise that an allowance for expenses should not be free from the obligation of accounting. The present provision of the bill as reported to the Senate, insofar as it relates to the President of the United States, is as follows:

The President shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected compensation in the aggregate amount of $150,000 a year, to be paid monthly, consisting of $100,000 for salary and an expense allowance of $50,000 to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which expense allowance no tax liability shall accrue and for which no accounting shall be made by him. He shall be entitled also to the use of the furniture and other effects belonging to the United States and kept in the Executive Mansion.

The provision relative to the expense allowance for the Vice President is, generally speaking, to similar effect. It reads as follows:

There shall be paid to the Vice President in equal monthly installments an expense allowance of $10,000 per annum to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which no tax liability shall occur or accounting be made by him.

The provision relative to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as it appears in the bill as introduced and reported, generally speaking, is to the same effect, and is as follows:

There shall be paid to the Speaker of the House of Representatives in equal monthly installments an expense allowance of $10,000 per annum (which shall be in lieu of the allowance provided by section 601 (b) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended) to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which no tax liability shall occur or accounting be made by him.

Mr. President, it will be observed that in each of the three provisions which I have read from the bill, as it has been presented to the Senate, there is a freedom from the obligation to account for the expenditures of the moneys which are granted as expense allowances. I want to call attention, before discussing this matter more fully, to two rather important portions of section 102, namely, that although $50,000 of the $150,000 is therein described in one breath as an expense allowance, nevertheless it is included in the term "compensation," for the word "compensation" as used in said section 102 is, to quote the section:

In the aggregate amount of $150,000 a year.

I submit, Mr. President, that the use of the term "compensation" as applied to the $50,000 included in the $150,000, although it is thereafter amplified in the section as being an expense allowance of $50,000, is a contradiction in terms, for if it is an expense allowance, it is not compensation, and if it is compensation, it is not an expense allowance.

I call attention also, Mr. President, to the fact that in the bill as presented—and I refer to line 2 on page 2 of the bill—it is stated that the expense allowance, so-called, of $50,000, is, and I quote the language:

To assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties.

We listened with interest only a short time ago today to the address made by the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], and I quote a portion of one of the sentences of that address. He said:

The majority views of the committee have not explained to the Senate that, although the President is authorized to have an entertainment and travel fund for his personal account of not less than $40,000, during the 2 years such authorization has existed he has not used this amount, despite the national campaign intervening. For the fiscal year 1948 the President used only $32,039 of the $40,000 granted.

Mr. President, it occurs to me that it is somewhat curious that, although in 1948, as the distinguished Senator from North Dakota says, despite the national campaign intervening, the President used only $32,039 of the $40,000 granted to him, we now have a bill which undertakes to increase by $50,000 his expense allowance. The $50,000 allowance, instead of being provided to cover all of it, or to cover it all with whatever provision now exists, is expressed in the pending bill as being merely to assist in defraying expenses. Why this enormous increase in expense? I do not know whether the expenses of the campaign included the trip of any of the campaign trains, particularly the one which went forth on the so-called nonpolitical trip early in the spring or summer of last year. Regardless of that fact, and whatever the fact may be, why is it that, although only $32,039 was used in 1948, despite the intervention of the national campaign, we should now be called upon to leave to the President the existing sum, whatever it may be, that is provided by statute, and then, merely to assist—and I underscore the word "assist"—in defraying his expenses, is it proposed to authorize a further sum of $50,000?

Mr. President, the fundamental point to which I invite the attention of Members of the Senate is that it is not sound public policy for us to be giving as expense allowances substantial amounts without requiring accounting as to the purposes for which those amounts shall be used.

Many of the Members of this body have been governors of their States.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator will recall that when we increased the salaries of United States Senators we gave them an expense account of $2,500 without any accounting whatsoever. As I recall, the Senator from Missouri was here and agreed to that provision. He made no such argument at that time as he is now making. I wonder if he would care to explain that inconsistency.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall be very glad to explain what the Senator refers to. I have in my hands the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, to which the distinguished Senator has referred. I was fully aware of that act when these amendments were presented to the Senate today. I may say in frankness that there is an inconsistency. To my mind a mistake was made in the process of enacting the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, in omitting to provide for an accounting.

I do not recall whether there was a record vote. If there was, I voted for the bill, because I was in favor of it. But regardless of that fact, to my mind what we should have done—and I think it should still be done—was one of two things: Either to provide in the law that the $2,500 which by the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is declared to be an expense allowance shall be subject to the obligation of accounting, or if it be deemed proper and just to Members of Congress, that there be a provision describing that amount as compensation. If it is desired to have that portion of the compensation free from tax liability, all well and good. That may be entirely proper. It might be entirely proper to have a $12,500 salary subject to income tax, and $2,500 not subject to income tax. But in response to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, I say, first, that he is correct in saying that there is an inconsistency; second, that although there is that inconsistency, we should not commit an error similar to or identical with that which was committed in 1946; third, the proper procedure would be to amend the act of 1946.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. As I understand the amendments submitted by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oregon, the purpose is to leave the bill with respect to these three items as it stands, except to call for an accounting in each case of the sum which is provided to assist in bearing the expense of the office.

Mr. DONNELL. The statement by the Senator from Georgia, although it strikes at and refers to the fundamental principle of the amendments, is not quite correct, in this respect: Although the bill as it is now pending before the Senate, and as it was introduced in the Senate, provides for an outright sum of $50,000 in any event, no matter if $1 or $50 or $100,000 of expense shall be incurred, this amendment—and I am reading now with relation to the President of the United States—provides as follows:

> The President shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected compensation of $100,000 a year, to be paid in equal monthly installments, and an annual allowance of not to exceed $50,000 for defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which allowance no tax liability shall accrue, and for which an accounting shall be made by him, and which allowance shall be payable in monthly installments on vouchers duly presented.

Let me say in concluding my response to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that the effect of this amendment—at least the intent, and I believe the effect—is that the President is granted an additional $50,000 for expenses, or rather up to but not exceeding $50,000, but that he shall receive of that sum only such amount as is actually expended, and for which vouchers are presented.

Mr. GEORGE. I thought the difference to which I first alluded was the only difference between the original and the amendment. But what troubles me—and I should like to have the Senator address himself to that point—is this: Since no requirements are made of the President and Vice President and Speaker of the House which would call for the expenditure of money by them in connection with their offices, that is, since nothing is made mandatory upon them in connection with their offices except such duties and responsibilities as are prescribed for the Vice President and the Speaker of the House, how is the requirement for an accounting consistent? Our beloved Vice President-elect might spend the full $10,000 on anything he thought had to do with his office. Since there are no prescribed extra duties which he must perform, and in connection with which he might have some expense, what is he to account for?

Mr. DONNELL. I think the bill itself, as it has been introduced and reported, answers the question of the Senator from Georgia. With respect to the Vice President, it provides:

> There shall be paid to the Vice President in equal monthly installments an expense allowance of $10,000 per annum to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties.

Mr. President, obviously that section contemplates that there are "expenses"—and again I quote—"relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties."

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator be kind enough to enumerate those duties or to refer to some statute which does enumerate them?

Mr. DONNELL. I know of no such statute; but I think obviously the Vice President will be called upon to incur numerous expenses—as, for illustration, in responding to invitations to speak, either in the United States or possibly abroad. He will be required to incur expenses for transportation, even locally, and doubtless other expenses. In the absence of bad faith—and, of course, there will be no bad faith; I have the utmost confidence in our good friend who will be called upon shortly to assume the Vice Presidency—I undertake to say that "expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties" will in fact relate to or result from the discharge of his official duties. I do not think there is any practical or legal difficulty in connection with the query made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. GEORGE. I am greatly disturbed by it, because the amendment would require an accounting, and presumably the General Accounting Office would look over the account, and might say that certain items were spent foolishly.

Mr. DONNELL. If that be so, then the proposed act is foolish in providing $10,000 for expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of the official duties of the Vice President.

Mr. GEORGE. That may be true; but when we provide official duties, and when no standard is fixed for them, and when nothing applies to them, except the discretion of the officer concerned, I do not think there would be any accounting standard, other than a statement at the end of the year, "I have a certain amount left of the $10,000, and I will put it back in the jug."

Mr. DONNELL. I do not share the apprehension of the Senator from Georgia. The Vice President of the United States unquestionably does incur expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties; and in the absence of an unreasonable construction of what expenses are embraced within that term, I think his certificate would be accepted and, as a matter of fact, in practicality would be of the utmost finality in determining the amounts allowed to be charged to it.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to say that I completely share the views expressed and the analysis made by the Senator from Missouri. I think the Senator from Georgia has raised a point which points out the Achilles heel of the measure presented by the Democrats. When the Senator from Georgia makes the point that the office of President and the office of Vice President do not maintain itemized lists of so-called official expenses to which he thinks our amendment would be applicable, my reply is that the American taxpayer should not be called upon to pay the expenses of any Government officer if those expenses are not official expenses. If there are expenses of the White House and of the Vice Presidency which ought to be paid by the American taxpayer, then it is the duty of the Congress of the United States to enumerate them and make them official. It is our duty to set forth the standards for official expenses to which the Senator from Georgia refers.

Mr. President, I share the view of the Senator from Missouri in regard to the so-called tax-exempt expense allowance for United States Senators. I voted for it, but I voted for it under protest, and with a public statement in opposition to that particular section of the bill. But, Mr. President, once again we were confronted, as so frequently we are confronted on the floor of the Senate, with a composite bill which we had either to vote for in its entirety or else vote it down in its entirety. I wish to say, because the Senator from Missouri and I talked about this very point earlier this afternoon, that I am one who believes that the section of our salary law which allows Senators $2,500 for expenses without an accounting and makes it tax-exempt in addition should be modified so that United States Senators would not benefit from any type of tax-exempt expense allowances such as the one we voted ourselves under the 1946 reorganization law. If we think we should have a $15,000 salary, then let us vote it as $15,000, subject to taxation. If we think we should have a $12,500 salary and have certain specific expenses paid, then let us list the expenses in the law and require an accounting. But I say it is a bad practice for the Congress of the United States—and it is bad for the American people—to have a provision of the type contained in the Senators' salary section of the 1946 reorganization bill.

Therefore. I take the position, in support of this amendment, that if the salary of the President of the United States and the salary of the Vice President and the salary of the Speaker of the House should be raised, let us raise them some fixed and definite amount. I protest including in the bill language which would permit a hidden expense account for which any officer of this Government would not have to make an itemized accounting, be he the President or the most lowly employee in our Government service.

Mr. President, what do you imagine thousands upon thousands of Government employees think down in their hearts about the legislation on the statute books which permits United States Senators to have a $2,500 expense account for which they have to make no accounting, whereas every time a Government employee has to take a trip on Government business, he has to make a detailed accounting of his expenses. Just consider the vouchers and the accounting he has to make for the very small sums we allow him even on his per-diem expense account. I am satisfied that the American people will not approve of a continuation of this tax-exempt, no-accounting expense fund policy. We should end it now.

There is something I wish to say further, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me to do so while I am on my feet, and then I shall not have to add further comment when he finishes. I desire to say that I think the time has come when certainly we should see to it that Government salaries for high offices are adequate for services performed; but Mr. President, there are compensations in public service, over and above money. There are those intangible values and personal satisfactions which come from serving one's fellow citizens through high office. There are the values of patriotic service which make public office a great inspiration to those of us who seek to make our contribution to human welfare through politics. I wish to say that I do not share the views of the subcommittee, in offering this bill today, that we have to pay salaries as high as those the subcommittee has provided in this bill, in order to have good, effective, able public service. I say some of these salaries are entirely too high. Some of the salaries listed in the bill—proposed salaries for certain jobs of $22,500 and $20,000 and $17,500—are entirely too high for the services rendered by the men in those jobs. This is especially true when we take into account the intangible values and satisfactions which such persons get out of the opportunity to serve their country through public office. People should not be encouraged to go into public service in order to make money. I want them to have a decent living; but I do not think we help to any extent the cause of good government by setting up a salary schedule for high Government officials in this country which makes it possible for them to either make lots of money out of their jobs or live lavishly in Washington at the taxpayers' expense. That is not the way we have built up strong, democratic principles of public service in this country. We will weaken the quality of unselfish public service in our Government if we make the economic benefits of the jobs something to be sought after rather than make the jobs a source of rich opportunity for public service. I refuse to concede that the only way we can obtain able and qualified public officers is to substitute the motive of money making for the patriotic motive of public service.

Let me say here—and I say it kindly, but I say it by way of observation after having been in Washington for some years—that there is entirely too much high living in Washington on the part of high Government officials. In Government service in this country, Mr. President, there is a trend that I do not think is consonant with the simple, democratic way of American life. I do not think it is necessary for Assistant Secretaries, Under Secretaries, and Cabinet officers to spend the amount of money that many of them spend in connection with their jobs. The type of living that characterizes so many of them in Washington, D. C., is resulting in an overemphasis of the social aspects of Government service and is out of keeping with simple democratic ways. Cocktail parties that cost from $500 to $1,000 should not be considered as being a necessary expense or social obligation of the job of serving in high public office in this country. One reason for the demand that the salaries of our high officials be raised is that the social expenses which have been allowed to develop around those jobs in Washington have become ridiculously extravagant and highly undemocratic. Poor men hesitate to take the jobs because of the expensive social tinsel which has been draped around the jobs. It is time to cut out much of the social extravaganza of the official life of Washington.

What Washington, D. C., needs is some simple living. We ought to set an example here in the Congress of the United States by not voting for a proposal which, in my judgment, will be an inducement, an encouragement to some of the unnecessary high living that has come to characterize to a considerable extent public service in Washington, D. C. The high costs of social life in Washington is having an effect, I may say, down in the grass roots of our democracy. Men of little wealth who would like to run for public office are discouraged when they hear of the expenses that some seem to think they have to incur if they are to meet the social obligations of the job. They are being told, and the example certainly is being set for them in Washington, that unless they have considerable economic backing of their own they cannot come here and meet the standard of living which some of our Government officials have been setting in so-called Washington social life. I want to say that one does not have to associate and rub shoulders with the rank and file of the American people very long without detecting a growing resentment over the extravagant living that has come to characterize so much of public life in Washington, D. C.

Certainly I want to see decent salaries paid; but I am not going to sit here, Mr. President, and vote for salaries which, in my judgment, will give encouragement to some of the unfortunate features of social life in Washington, which I think are not setting a good example so far as simple democratic life in America is concerned. In my opinion, some of the salaries are entirely too high. We should pay salaries adequate to enable the Government to obtain the services of competent men; but let such men recognize that the taxpayers are not going to pay them salaries which will permit them to conduct themselves on a social level of high living and social extravagance which have come to characterize so many of our official functions here in Washington. It is not true that one has to become involved in that social whirl in order to serve the interests of his State in Washington or perform the functions of any appointive job in Washington. Unfortunately too many Government officials seem to hold to a contrary view, but they should not receive any aid from Congress by such large increases in salary as this bill proposes.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri indulge me just a moment? I do not want to trespass on his time.

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to say I raised only the one question as to accounting, not the question whether the expense account ought to be exempt from taxation. I think that is a very bad principle. I would not undertake to defend it here and now, or hereafter, so far as that feature of it goes. But I call the Senator's attention to the fact that, without prescribing the duties relating to the office of President, Vice President, and Speaker, there is introduced an incongruous, inconsistent, and illogical provision, when it is sought to prescribe that there shall be an accounting for what they do with that money. There is a difference that I wanted to point out in the case of senatorial salaries. While personally I argued with the author of the bill against the exemption from tax of the $2,500 there is this distinction, and it is very vital: Under our revenue laws, in all businesses where any officer or agent representing the business is required to go away from his home to discharge his duties, he has a right to charge against his income all legitimate items of expense incurred by him, including the hiring of rooms or the maintenance of an apartment, if his business carries him into a city frequently enough; his meals, and everything else. It was thought, with a great deal of reason and common sense, that inasmuch as the official duties of a Member of Congress were performed principally, but not wholly, in Washington, and partly also in the State of the residence of the Senator and the Member of the House, when the Member of the Congress was away from his home on official business under the requirement of the law, he should have a perfect right to charge his actual expenditures; that is to say, all legitimate expenses incurred in attending to his official duties away from his home.

That is precisely why it was arbitrarily said that $2,500 of the amount is certainly a minimum for the expenses incurred by the Member of Congress when he is on his official duties and is away from his home. He maintains his home anyway; his expenses go on at home, and when he comes to Washington he simply has an additional expense account. That is why $2,500 was provided in the reorganization bill free of tax, and I dare say there is no Senator who will not agree at once that $2,500 will not defray the expense of any single one of the Senators in Washington while he is in Washington carrying on his official duties.

That is the explanation of that. I do not think there is any real inconsistency in supporting that principle, except I think it a bad principle to exempt anything that is in the nature of compensation or income from the payment of the tax. But that is the only legitimate ground, as I see it, upon which any just criticism can be made of the $2,500 allowance in the salary of Members of the House and Senate, or attaching to that salary.

I am still worried, I may say to the Senator, that without any standard to go by, and without any legal requirement regarding the expenditures the President and the Vice President and the Speaker of the House, respectively, may make, the accounting is tantamount to saying, "Well, you have this money," and at the end of the year we shall take a look at it. Perhaps it will be publicized in the press, as to how much you have spent for this, that, or the other, or what you have spent it for, and how much you still have left." If we are to allow an expense account, a sum total, the fair way of doing it is not to require an accounting of it, but do just as we do in the income-tax law. We say that if the taxpayer employs the short form of return, he may deduct 10 percent of his total income, or $500, to cover such items as contributions to charity, taxes, and so forth. That is an arbitrary determination; and we can likewise arbitrarily determine that the President should have $50,000 for expenses and the Speaker and the Vice President $10,000.

I think it would be better to subject all allowances of every kind in the nature of compensation to taxation, so that if the tax is too burdensome, when the President asks us to raise $4,000,000,000 additional taxes, he will have a gentle reminder of what it all amounts to. I think from that aspect the Senator stands on a very sound basis, but when it comes to accounting for something in one's own free discretion, it strikes me that the amendment is not well considered on that point, and for the reason I have stated.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. KILGORE. I may say to the Senator from Missouri it has been ruled by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, practically ever since the income-tax law went into effect, that allowances for quarters, light, heat, rations, and travel, and all other allowances to Army and Navy officers, were not even to be listed on their income-tax returns. Those items were totally and completely exempted from taxation, so that the only tax levied against such persons was on the actual pay they received, the remainder being considered as expenses of their business, just as officials of private companies and their employees are allowed an exemption for personal expenses.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, the discussion has certainly been interesting to me, and I am very happy to have the comments of the distinguished Senators who have spoken, all three of them, the Senator from Oregon, the Senator from Georgia, and the Senator from West Virginia. The point made by the Senator from Georgia, namely, that there probably should be more definite standards in the law than there are now, of course appeals to everyone.

Perhaps I am not stating quite fairly the position of the Senator from Georgia, and I shall rephrase my statement. The Senator takes the view, as I understand, that because statutes at the present time do not set forth with particularity the duties of these various officers and for what they may expend funds, therefore there would be difficulty in requiring an accounting for expenditures which are not specifically authorized or the purposes of which are not specifically assigned in connection with the duties of those respective officers.

Mr. President, I can see that point, and it may well be that there should be amendment made to the statutes of the United States more clearly and definitely stating just what it is for which these various officers may expend money. I should have no objection, Mr. President, to the passage of a statute which would provide that the President of the United States may expend money for transportation, for food, upkeep, and various other matters which may be outlined in detail.

I see on the floor of the Senate this afternoon various Senators, including the distinguished proponent of this bill who presented the initial argument in favor of it, who have served as governors of their States. While I am not familiar with the statutes of other States, I have no doubt that their statutes are somewhat similar to those of my own, which require, at least in most instances, a very considerable accounting on the part of the Governor of the State as to the expenditures which he makes and for which vouchers are issued to him.

Mr. President, I think the amendment in which the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] and I have joined, is a wholesome amendment. I undertake to say that the people of the United States, who are the stockholders of this great corporation or entity, namely, our Government, are entitled to know for what purposes the moneys which are allotted as expense allowances are expended. I take it that they are entitled to know it.

Furthermore, Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Georgia, apparently those Senators who prepared the bill were of the opinion that it is possible to recognize what items constitute expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of the official duties of each of these three officials. If, Mr. President, it is impossible to determine what the expenses are, what they relate to, or whether they result from the discharge of official duties, what justification is there for this bill reciting as the purpose of the expense allowance assistance in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of official duties? If it be proper to use that language in the bill for the purpose of justifying the so-called expense allowance which in the earlier portion of the same sentence is referred to, as I have pointed out, not merely as expense allowance, but as compensation, or if it be proper to use the language "relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties," it certainly would be possible for the man who spends the money, the President of the United States, the Vice President of the United States, or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, reasonably to state on paper, over his signature, what the expenses are and how they relate to or result from the discharge of official duties.

I should not be averse to supporting, in due time, an appropriate amendment more clearly and specifically outlining the purpose for which these officers may spend money. Every proponent of the bill, as I understand, every member of the committee, except the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], voted in favor of reporting the bill to the Senate, thereby voting in favor of the proposition that the expenses referred to relate to or result from the discharge of the official duties of these various officials. I undertake to say that is strong presumptive evidence that the President, our distinguished Vice President-elect, and the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives can point out with very clear distinctness what it is they have spent and why those expenses relate to or result from the discharge of their respective duties.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, does not the Senator agree with me that it is no reflection on the President, Vice President, or the Speaker to make an accounting for the money they spend? In my State, as Governor I had to account for every item of $1 or more, and I had to do so under oath. The distinguished Senator from Missouri has just said that that is the custom in his State, and, I believe, in many other States. Certainly I believe that the President of the United States should set an example for every other public official in this country.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Senator from North Dakota. I thoroughly agree with him, Mr. President.

As the distinguished Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] has pointed out, when one of the subordinate officials of our Government, or one of the employees, or one of the auditors, goes out over the United States on an official trip of some kind, upon official duty, he must put down that he spent so much for board and lodging, so much for telegrams, so much for Pullman fare, so much for airplane passage, or whatever the expense might be. It seems to me that it is hardly appropriate to suggest that the President of the United States shall have prepared for his benefit a provision that no accounting shall be made by him for his expense allowance.

Mr. President, I think the fact which has been previously mentioned, namely, that according to the information of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], of the $40,000 already available to the President, he has used only $32,039 for the year 1948, raises very clearly a question, first, as to why he should have any additional allowance for expenses, and, secondly, if he should have it, why should he not account to the people of the country, the stockholders who pay the bill, and why should he not tell us for what purposes he spends the money?

I had some experience many years ago in traveling around a little for a private corporation. It was required of me, as I recall, that I furnish an expense account to the corporation for which I traveled. There is nothing unreasonable about it. There is no reflection upon anyone. It is wholesome. It is an example which should be given by the Chief Magistrate and the other high officials of the people of the country.

Mr. President, I see across the Chamber one of the Senators from the State of California. I recall with clear distinctness that it was only last spring that the legislature of his State passed a bill providing for a certain amount—I have forgotten the amount at this time——

Mr. LANGER. It was $25,000.

Mr. DONNELL. Twenty-five thousand dollars which should be available for the purpose of advocating a certain measure called the Tidelands measure. In the bill passed by the legislature of the State of California there was a provision to the effect, in substance, that the persons spending money need not file vouchers for their expenditures. I think I saw local newspapers in Washington—certainly I saw newspapers from California—which commented upon the curious spectacle of a sum of money authorized without the obligation of accounting and with an affirmative statement that the filing of vouchers was not necessary. What happened? The Governor of the State, who had been previously nominated and elected as the candidate of both the Democratic and Republican Parties, failed to sign the bill. I have no doubt, Mr. President, that the wave of feeling which was engendered by the passage of that bill at least rendered some possible service in calling to the attention of the chief magistrate of California the fact that it was improper and unwholesome that such legislation should be passed.

Mr. President, I shall not trespass longer, at this time, at any rate, upon the Senate. I merely rose upon the proposition that the bill as it now stands is unwholesome in that it relieves the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives from the obligation to account; and upon the further proposition that it is wholesome, and for the best interests of our Nation, that every person in this country may know what every dollar of an expense account is expended for.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I rise to support the amendments offered by the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oregon. I had planned to offer similar amendments, but since they have previously offered theirs, I shall support the amendments offered by the two Senators.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Am I to understand the Senator would like to join as one of the cosponsors of the amendments?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should be very happy to join.

Mr. MORSE. I am sure I speak for the Senator from Missouri when I say that he and the junior Senator from Oregon will welcome the Senator as a cosponsor of the amendments.

Mr. DONNELL. We certainly will, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, after 2 weeks of work at this session it seems ironic to note that the first piece of legislation to be considered by the Eighty-first Congress should be a bill to raise the salaries of the President, Vice President, Speaker of the House of Representatives, and well over 200 of other top executives heading the numerous Government agencies. Furthermore, there is not a single one of the sponsors of this bill who will dispute the fact that the proposed salary increase for these executives is no other than a forerunner of a general salary increase for all executive branches of the Government service, and that another bill incorporating a substantial increase for all of the other thousands of this group will be following in the very near future.

As a background for this increase, the sponsors of the bill S. 103 have relied upon the report of the Hoover Commission as endorsing these salary adjustments, but what they have completely ignored is the fact that the Hoover Commission in making recommendations for these salary increases in certain executive departments of our Government has also recommended a drastic reorganization of these departments, eliminating many of the overlapping agencies and, in general, achieving a substantial economy in the administration of our Government.

This latter recommendation for the overhauling of our Government departments is going to be the major, not the minor, recommendation of the Hoover Commission and while I am not opposed to an upward revision in the salary schedules of these executives as recommended by the Hoover report I do feel that such salary increases should be made contingent upon the adoption or at least the consideration of the report itself.

It is common gossip in the cloakrooms now, as every one of us knows, that the work of this Commission, which was authorized by the Eightieth Congress and endorsed by the President himself, is expected to be ignored by the Congress in fear that its adoption would eliminate some of the patronage it now enjoys. I feel very strongly that any action whatsoever in revising salary scales of the heads of these departments, as recommended in this report, should be postponed until such time as consideration can be given to the report in its entirety.

I do recognize, however, that consideration toward revising the salary scale of the President and Vice President is in a different category in that any changes made in their salary base in order to be applicable during the next 4 years must be taken prior to the 20th day of January. For that reason I feel that it is proper that consideration should be given and a decision made as to what we intend to do in regard to their two salaries.

The office of the President of the United States is the highest and most important position in our country, and the requirements demanded of the man who holds that position, in addition to the social obligations demanded of him by virtue of his position, are such that this office should carry a salary commensurate with his responsibility.

Here again we find that the Hoover Commission approached this subject upon a sound and realistic basis when it recognized the social obligations of the President, and recommended that the Government should take over the complete expenses of the operation of the White House. In President Hoover's testimony before the committee upon this subject, he stated:

Perhaps if the Government should take over the obligation of running the White House, which I think should have been done

20 years ago, it might be even a better solution than increasing the President's salary.

If we are to follow President Hoover's recommendation in this respect, which I think is a sound approach to the problem, then there is no necessity for rushing this bill through Congress at this time, because action could be taken after January 20, at some time when we were considering the Hoover report itself.

As it is now, the President, in addition to the $75,000 annual salary, receives a $40,000 expense allowance which must be accounted for. I agree with the Senator from Missouri that expenditures from this expense account should be accounted for. During the war years this $40,000 fund was augmented by a special contingency fund which Congress allocated to the President to be handled at his discretion.

Senate bill 103 proposes to continue this expense allowance of $40,000, in addition to any other money which may be appropriated by the Congress toward the payment of expenses of the White House. Supplementing these expense allowances, the bill under consideration proposes to increase the President's salary from the current $75,000 to $100,000 a year, and at the same time grants him a special $50,000 tax-exempt payment upon which no accounting would be required. Simply stated, the proposed salary for the President under this bill is $150,000, of which $50,000 is tax-exempt.

I am unalterably opposed to the establishment of a precedent under which a portion of the salary of the President or of any other Government official would be made in the form of a tax-exempt payment. The system now in operation, under which a portion of the salaries of the Members of Congress are tax-exempt, is wrong, and if I had been a Member of the Congress at the time the law was enacted, I most certainly would have voted against that provision.

The President of the United States, the Members of Congress, and other top officials of the executive branch of our Government, are responsible for the fiscal affairs of our country. We as policy makers authorize these large expenditures which necessitate increased tax rates, amounting in some instances to confiscation. I think it is a healthy condition for our own good, and particularly for the good of the country, that we as officials of the Government suffer along with the other taxpayers. For this reason I feel that whatever increase in salary is proposed for the President and Vice President or any other Government official should be made on a flat basis, subject to all such rates of taxation as are applied to other individuals in this country. This can be done by increasing the figures in the bill as salary compensation to a point adequate to take care of the desired objective.

Another advantage to this approach is that it will bring home forcibly to the President and to all officials responsible for the fiscal policy of our Government the seriousness of our existing and future tax burdens, by making all taxes applicable to their own fortunes as well as to the fortunes of the other 145,000,000 Americans.

There is no use in our kidding ourselves. We all know that the only reason for this approach of making a portion of their salaries tax-exempt is that we are afraid to call to the attention of the American people the seriousness of our present tax structure by inserting in this bill a salary figure high enough to bring the take-home pay up to that point which is desired at this time. Under this proposal the salary of the President is set at $150,000, of which amount $50,000 is tax-exempt. This formula is used because the sponsors of the bill wish to grant to the President a net take-home pay, after taxes, of around $93,000. To have achieved this result by merely granting the President a salary increase high enough to leave a take-home pay of this amount under our existing tax laws would have necessitated an increase in his salary from the current $75,000 a year to about $300,000, or an increase of about 400 percent. This was called to the attention of the committee by President Hoover himself, who said:

> The President and the Speaker and the Vice President, as all of you gentlemen, are afflicted with the increased income tax; and the salary, nominal salary, does not at all represent what is left. That is also one of your problems in the upper brackets of civil service; that the greatly increased income taxes tend to greatly lessen all these incomes.

Mr. Hoover continued:

> Every citizen has to bear his share of that burden, but particularly on the President, I think, it is too hard a burden. The President has to carry a great many public burdens that can only be met indirectly, and I would like to suggest to you a line of inquiry.
> I am not prepared to say whether the President should not have an increase in salary, but if you look at the effect of the income tax upon an increased salary, you will see he does not get much if you double it. * * *
> I looked into the income tax, State and Federal, and I note that the salary of $75,000 for the President, after deduction of State and Federal income taxes, leaves about $43,000. Whereas, if you put his salary up to $150,000, he would have about $68,000 left.

The committee recognized this situation, where, under our existing tax rates, to achieve its objective of leaving the President around $90,000 take-home pay, his salary would have to be set near $300,000. In other words, were we to set his salary at $300,000 annually and allow him to pay all of the taxes now being demanded of any other American citizen making a similar amount, the President would have left actually less money than he would have under the bill before us. There are many people in our country who do not realize that once a man reaches these upper brackets 81 percent of his earnings is returned to the Federal Treasury and out of the remaining 19 percent which he has left he is still called upon to pay his State and local taxes.

To me this adds up to confiscation, but in spite of this astounding fact we find the President himself in his message to this Congress urging that we enact laws to raise these rates even higher on all those individuals who are earning in excess of $5,000, and particularly that we should raise rates on those who are earning exceptionally high salaries. To extend to the President at this time a special tax exemption would be, it seems to me, inconsistent with the President's own recommendations to this Congress when he said that the burden of paying the running expenses of the Government should always fall on those who are earning high salaries. As I said earlier, I am not opposed to a revision of the President's salary, but I know of no better way to emphasize to the President himself the fact that our tax rate has almost reached the confiscation level than to keep him and all other Government officials always in a position where their own salaries will be taxed along with the rest of the people.

For the information of those who are not familiar with our tax rates, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD at this point a chart showing our present graduated tax rates and would urge that each Member of Congress keep those rates forever in mind when advocating unnecessary expenditures.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Over $2,000 but not over $4,000: $400, plus 22 percent of excess over $2,000.

Over $4,000 but not over $6,000: $840, plus 26 percent of excess over $4,000.

Over $6,000 but not over $8,000: $1,360, plus 30 percent of excess over $6,000.

Over $8,000 but not over $10,000: $1,960, plus 34 percent of excess over $8,000.

Over $10,000 but not over $12,000: $2,640, plus 38 percent of excess over $10,000.

Over $12,000 but not over $14,000: $3,400, plus 43 percent of excess over $12,000.

Over $50,000 but not over $60,000: $26,820, plus 75 percent of excess over $50,000.

Over $60,000 but not over $70,000: $34,320, plus 78 percent of excess over $60,000.

Over $70,000 but not over $80,000: $42,120, plus 81 percent of excess over $70,000.

Over $80,000 but not over $90,000: $50,220, plus 84 percent of excess over $80,000.

Over $150,000 but not over $200,000: $111,820, plus 90 percent of excess over $150,000.

Over $200,000: $156,820, plus 91 percent of excess over $200,000.

These rates are subject to the reductions approved under Public Law No. 471—Eightieth Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope and urge that this bill will be amended by the Senate, removing this tax exemption in favor of the President, Vice President, and the Speaker of the House—the three men who more than any others should be held responsible for the solvency of our Government.

Let us extend whatever salary increase we wish to give these officials in the open.

If this special tax exemption feature is not removed from the bill, I will be compelled to vote against the measure as a matter of principle.

Confronted as we are today with a national debt of over $250,000,000,000 and a record peacetime budget for the next fiscal year in excess of $41,600,000,000, it is unthinkable that we should even consider setting aside a special group of Government officials to be exempt from their obligations of helping to support the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the first amendment of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

The first amendment was on page 3, after line 10, to strike out:

(f) The allowance for clerical assistance to the Vice President contained in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act for the fiscal year 1949, at rates of compensation to be fixed by him in multiples of $5 per month, hereby is increased from $32,385 per annum to $45,000 per annum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment.

Mr. MORSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-eight Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment on page 3, after line 10.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The next amendment was, on page 7, after line 8, to insert:

Notwithstanding the act of February 23, 1931 (5 U. S. C. 152a), the salary of the legal adviser of the Department of State shall not be increased as a result of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That completes the committee amendments.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all after line 15, on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. The provisions of this act shall take effect at noon on January 20, 1949.

It is also proposed to amend the title so as to read:

A bill to increase rates of compensation of the President, Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, to include the $330 not added to the salaries of the classified employees of the District of Columbia and of the Foreign Service.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I inquire who has the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. I am offering an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. How can the Senator offer an amendment to my amendment until I yield the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will be given an opportunity when the Senator from Illinois has concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, this amendment strikes out of Senate bill 103, beginning on page 3, line 16 of the bill, section 2, and the remaining part thereof, merely leaving for consideration that portion of the bill which seeks to increase the rates of compensation of the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Before I discuss these three provisions briefly, let me say to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER], who was responsible for the appointment of the subcommittee to hear evidence on this important measure, that the majority desire to thank him for that service, and also to thank the members of the committee for the contribution which they have made in reporting a bill of great importance.

We on this side regret exceedingly that we are compelled at this time to offer this amendment. We do it for a very good and valid reason. It has already been demonstrated here today, as a result of these debates, that insofar as employees in the lower classifications are concerned, there is some disagreement as to whether or not other individuals should be included; and perhaps some who are included should be excluded.

I think it goes without saying that in the event we should send this bill in its present form to the House of Representatives, as a result of the debates which we have had today, it would be defeated through delay because in paragraph 6 of section 1 of article II of the Constitution of the United States it is provided that:

The President shall, at stated times, receive for his services, a compensation, which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected, and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them.

Unless the Congress of the United States acts with dispatch, the President of the United States will not be able to receive during the next 4 years the benefits provided in the bill. I am informed by the leadership in the House of Representatives that as yet the House committees have not been organized. The turnover was great in the House of Representatives. There are many difficulties in the assignment of committees. Consequently, if this measure is to become law before the 20th of January, it will be necessary for the House of Representatives to obtain unanimous consent in order to take up this measure. The leaders of the majority as well as the leaders of the minority in the House of Representatives have agreed, insofar as they can, to go along with those three provisions of the bill, provided we get the bill over to the House of Representatives as expeditiously as possible.

That is the parliamentary situation in the House of Representatives. I am certain that the great majority of the Members of the Senate desire to increase the salary of the President of the United States and to increase his expense account. I think it would be short of elemental justice to him if we did not do this immediately. That is especially true if we give those in the lower classifications and others who are not included in the classifications an increase in salary later on.

Remember, Mr. President, that this subcommittee was composed of the able Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], the able Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], and the able Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR]. Two Republicans and one Democrat made this subcommittee report to the full committee, and the full committee reported the bill by an affirmative vote of 10 to 1. Surely the least we can do, in view of the study made by the subcommittee and the action of the full committee, is to pass the bill with the amendment which I have offered. I hope that the bill will go to the House of Representatives in the form suggested, with the exception of one amendment which I have agreed to with the minority leader and which will be offered in due course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. I apologize to him for having interrupted him out of order. I had supposed that the President pro tempore was about to put the question on the amendment. That was the reason for my jumping up hastily as I did.

The amendment which I am about to offer would retain in the bill the last section, section 8, on page 8, relating to the two groups who did not receive an increase last July when an increase was granted to all other members of the classified service. Therefore, I move to amend the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois by retaining section 8, and renumbering it as section 3. I offer that as an amendment to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator from Vermont is simply offering the amendment to my amendment; is that correct?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, speaking as the minority leader, and referring to the amendment just proposed by my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Vermont, to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, I think it necessary to state that in the minority policy committee meeting this morning, at which the pros and cons of the question of taking up this bill or any part of it were discussed, it was the opinion of the minority policy committee that only the part that is included in the so-called Lucas amendment—namely, the provision increasing the salaries of the President, Vice President, and Speaker of the House—should be reported from the committee and debated by the Members of the Senate, because of the fact that if we were to consider the entire subject, there would be many meritorious proposals which Senators would like to consider.

So, not only because of the parliamentary situation which prevails, as was so ably pointed out and discussed by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] but because of the fact that if we are to pass the bill and have it passed by the House of Representatives, we must pass it promptly, it was the opinion of the policy committee that, even though the meritorious position taken by the distinguished Senator from Vermont might be entirely justified, yet the only feature of the bill which should be brought up for debate and on which the minority should take a position, was the part relating to the salaries of the President, Vice President, and Speaker of the House.

Therefore, much as I hate to do so—because there are many provisions which I should like to see debated and incorporated in a complete bill—for the reasons just stated it will be necessary to oppose the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

I hope, as minority leader, I have made my position clear.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I bear witness to the fact, since I was present, that the minority leader is carrying out the decision of the minority policy committee.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether—assuming that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is defeated—the minority will cooperate in seeing that justice is done to the District of Columbia employees, in securing for them the pay raise which was denied them last summer, which denial has worked a grievous injustice upon them.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to answer the Senator.

The minority is always glad to cooperate in seeing that justice is done anywhere along the line. But for me to say that the minority will agree to that particular matter is useless. All I can say now is that we are perfectly willing to agree now, as the minority, to see to it that the salaries of the President, Vice President, and Speaker of the House of Representatives are increased. We are willing to agree to that in order to get the bill passed by the Senate and sent promptly to the House of Representatives, so as to make it possible for the House to pass the bill by the 20th of January.

There are other amendments which will be offered, and when they are offered it will be up to each individual Senator to take his own position in regard to how he feels about the amendments themselves. But as the minority, we have taken this position in the hope that we can be most cooperative and can expedite the passage of the bill at this time.

In further answer to the Senator, let me say that I am satisfied that when we come to all other pay bills we shall be glad to give full consideration to the reporting and debating of bills which we hope will do justice all around.

Mr. O'CONOR. But does not the Senator feel that an unusual situation exists with respect to District of Columbia employees, in that they have been denied an increase which has been granted to others during the past 6 months?

Mr. WHERRY. No doubt that is correct, but if we take up that matter today, the bill will not be passed today, as I believe it should be, for, as stated on both sides of the aisle, if we are to do anything in this connection promptly, we must do only this much. Therefore, I think we should act as I have indicated.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to discuss a matter which was brought up by the minority floor leader.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. FLANDERS. Am I correct in saying that the amendment I have offered to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois was not brought up before the minority policy committee, so that it is not a policy matter, but is an individual matter for each Senator to decide?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; except that the minority policy committee took the position that we would go this far and no further at this time, on account of the parliamentary situation and also because of other reasons which were brought out at that time.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland one or two questions if I may do so.

In his observation several minutes ago, the Senator from Maryland said he was hopeful that Senators on this side of the aisle and all other Senators would take an active interest in seeing that justice is done to the employees of the District of Columbia. Do I correctly infer from his otherwise splendid statement that the Senator from Maryland means to indicate that the section of the bill relating to the matter would provide a retroactive pay increase for all District of Columbia employees?

Mr. O'CONOR. I answer the question by saying that it would provide a retroactive increase for all who were excluded from the Pay Revision Act of 1948.

Mr. CAIN. Let me suggest to the Senator from Maryland that in part—and in part only—is he correct. The provision of the bill would give increases to 7,000 out of 18,000 civil-service servants of the District of Columbia. In the absence of legislation which will adequately provide for all those having equal rights to such advantages, I should certainly think that at this time the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois should be voted down.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, I am in thorough agreement with the Senator from Washington in his expressed desire to see justice done to all employees of the District of Columbia. However, as the Senator well knows, a certain segment of that group was excluded last July.

In this bill we were attempting to put back into that status the group which was excluded, and we were hopeful that that would be the first step in doing justice to the entire group, as the Senator from Washington undoubtedly wants done.

Mr. CAIN. But I suggest that in the last weeks of the session of Congress last summer, the entire 18,000 were excluded, for the bill would have made increases, not only for the 7,000 referred to in the measure now before us, but for the entire 18,000.

Mr. O'CONOR. Of course it is our desire to see that justice is done both to the 7,000 and to the entire 18,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, I rise to oppose the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois. I do so for yet another reason, which I hope the Senate will bear in mind.

It was my experience, upon going home after the last session, at which we increased by $330 the salaries of various classified employees in the civil service and other employees, that there are a great number of the lowest paid employees of the Government, not included in the civil service, as to whom that pay raise does not apply. I understand now that the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, simply would provide a raise—as should be done, at the proper time—for those who were excluded in the District of Columbia; that is, employees of the District of Columbia; and perhaps some of the Foreign Service employees. I think, before any such sweeping action is taken, a measure should be drafted that will do justice to the many thousands of unclassified employees who, either by design or by accident, were excluded from the provisions of the act passed by the last Congress. For that reason—and I think it is an excellent one—I certainly object to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. I hope it will be voted down by the Senate.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should again like to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to the fact, which is important in the proceeding, those in the classified service are the only employees over whom the Post Office and Civil Service Committee has any authority. It has no jurisdiction in any way over the other employees of the District of Columbia.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to say merely one more word, that I neglected to say, in the previous short address I made to the Senate upon the pending measure. I talked to the President of the United States last night about the bill. In fact, he called me. In substance he said—and he wanted the Senate to know this—that he is more anxious and more interested in the groups in the lower classifications getting what is necessary in the way of adequate pay in order that they may render efficient service to the Government than he is in his own increase in salary. I assured him that the moment we were able to pass the pending bill in the Senate, I would be prepared to introduce a measure dealing with all the other officials and employees of Government in the various classifications. I have conferred with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSTON], chairman of the committee, and I have a bill ready to be introduced today, as soon as the pending bill is passed. It is a bill which will bear the names of the same Senators who introduced a similar bill heretofore. The bill will be referred immediately to the committee. The Senator from South Carolina has assured me that hearings will be held and every opportunity given to individual Senators to present further their views, and the bill will be reported with all convenient speed. I think I am correct in that statement.

Mr JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is entirely correct. At this time I want to say I have talked to the Senators on the committee. A majority of the Members feel that at this time, under the circumstances in which we find ourselves, we should go along and pass the bill the acting majority leader wants passed, and then later we take up another bill, and include in it not only the employees covered by this particular bill, but many others who ought to be covered, such as those the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND] mentioned a few minutes ago.

We mean to have hearings, and try to report a satisfactory bill, if possible. Work is being done on the matter. The subcommittee worked tirelessly for long hours, and did a good job, but at the same time, after the pending bill was brought before the full committee, I think it was agreed that other officials and employees and groups of employees should be provided for. We certainly want provision made for them. I refer, for example, to the FBI, the Farm Credit Administration, and the REA head. We could go on to name others. That matter will be taken up at the proper time in the hearings. But we find ourselves in a position at the present time where we must act quickly. We can carry only so much of the load. We want to carry as much as we can, but no more. For that reason I shall have to vote against the amendment which has been offered to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Illinois, because I do not want to load the bill with anything that might prevent its passage when it goes to the other House.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I noticed that the Senator from South Carolina named certain officials that he said would receive consideration. In looking over the bill, it occurred to me that it was very ironic that the official who is responsible for raising all the money the Government spends, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has a job of vast responsibility, who is supposed to raise the $44,000,000,000 that is to be expended, was omitted entirely. He was left with a $10,330 salary. All the officials of the Government who have the duty and responsibility of giving away our money or loaning our money receive very substantial pay increases. It does seem to me that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has the stupendous job of collecting the money and getting it into the Treasury, should have a little consideration.

The bill in its present form also increases greatly the pay of all the Assistant Attorneys General, and of nearly all the other lawyers connected with the independent agencies; but the general counsel for the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who has to wrestle with the greatest tax lawyers in the Nation, working day and night in protecting the Treasury, has received no recognition whatever in the bill.

I wanted to bring that matter to the attention of the Senate. I think certain of the salaries are entirely too high, and I cannot support the pending bill as written. I shall support a fair salary-increase bill. But certainly if we are going to increase the salaries of all those whose duties are to spend the money or to give the money, we should give some recognition to the very important officer who has to sweat out the job of supervising the collection of all the tax funds throughout the United States.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question. It may be that it should very well be addressed to the Senator from Maryland, who, as I understand, served as chairman of the subcommittee that reported the bill.

From a reading of the language in the first section, amending section 102 of title III, it appears that the aggregate amount we are allowing to the President is $150,000, consisting of $100,000 salary and an expense allowance of $50,000. From all reports, the newspaper reports and various things we have heard, it is my understanding that the purpose is to give the President an additional expense allowance of $50,000, for which there shall be no accounting; which is in addition to another $40,000 that is allowed him. That is the purpose, is it not?

Mr. O'CONOR. That is the purpose. The Senator's statement is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I ask the question because it appears from reading the language of the bill, particularly when reference is made to the aggregate amount of $150,000, the intention of the bill would be to allow the President only $150,000, and not that amount in addition to the $40,000 he is already receiving.

Mr. O'CONOR. Mr. President, the explanation is that the allowance of $40,000 is by separate authorization. It is not mandatory. The statute specifically says, "There may be expended by the President an amount not to exceed $40,000, if and when it is authorized and appropriated by the Congress." So that the amount mentioned in Senate bill 103 is in addition to and separate and distinct from that authorization.

Mr. SPARKMAN. It is not intended by the language of the bill to repeal the authorization of that additional amount of $40,000, is it?

Mr. O'CONOR. It is not so intended.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, with reference to the remarks made relative to the determination of the policy committee of the minority this morning, I want to have it strictly understood it was only in the form of a recommendation. It is not a question of party policy. Each member of course, can do as he pleases in voting on the bill.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I desire to make it clear that this is a perfect illustration of what it means to have a policy committee within the Republican Party. Here are 11 Senators holding a meeting of the policy committee, in which six have control, yet the minority member of the committee is not invited to attend. I offered an amendment at the time we met, providing that the policy committee should consist of every single Republican, the entire 42. At that time I was assured by the distinguished Senator from Ohio that whenever anything came up involving the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, I should be invited. On the very first bill, we find that the policy committee of 11 men met, without the minority member being called in.

I now serve notice that I shall give the week's notice which is required by the rules of the Republican organization, and that I shall call again upon every Member of the Republican Party to vote upon the proposition as to whether six Republicans are to control Republican policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, with reference to the remarks just made by the Senator from North Dakota, I wish to back up the statement made by our able minority leader. No six Republicans are trying to determine our policy in this instance. I happen to be acquainted with the situation to which the minority leader refers. The policy committee is a part of this body under the Reorganization Act, and it has certain responsibilities. It took action and recommended that the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], as modified by the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], be approved.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I may say in response to that statement that the trouble with the argument is that the views of the different members of the Republican Party are not even brought before all the members of the policy committee. It goes down to the very roots of the difficulty. If I were a lobbyist, the only members of the Republican Party I would have to see would be six men. If I convinced those six men, I would know the Republican policy. The same may be true of the Democratic Party, although I am not familiar with the rules of that party. Even though the verdict of the policy committee is not binding, nevertheless it does influence certain Senators, especially new ones, in some instances. That is my entire objection. I state it now because this is an appropriate time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment which I offer to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois, and which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will state the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the amendment of Mr. LUCAS it is proposed to insert at the appropriate place a new section 2, as follows:

In computing the amount to be deducted from the compensation of any official whose salary is increased under this act for the purposes of the Civil Service Retirement Act of May 29, 1930, as amended, and in computing the amount of any annuity under such act, any increased compensation provided by this act shall be disregarded until further act of Congress.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the amendment provides that the increases in compensation provided by the bill shall not be considered in determining the amounts of annuities under the Civil Service Retirement Act. At the present time the President and the Vice President are not covered by the Retirement Act. It affects the Speaker of the House. However, we felt that it might establish a precedent, and in view of the fact that the complete Retirement Act and amendments thereto will be gone into at this session, we felt that it should be separated, because it is a pay bill and not a retirement bill. That is the purpose of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], as amended.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Chief Clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). In view of the possible interest that I may have in this legislation, I ask to be excused from voting.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senator from Kentucky is excused from voting.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senater from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH] are absent on official business.

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

I announce further that if present and voting the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senators from Oklahoma [Mr. KERR and Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. MCGRATH], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "yea."

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I announce that the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER], and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] are necessarily absent.

The result was announced—yeas 84, nays 2, as follows:

So the amendment of Mr. LUCAS, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, is it in order now to offer the amendments which have been presented and which were discussed a little while ago?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is in order now to offer the amendments.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, at this time I offer the three amendments which have been previously presented for reading and for discussion by the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], and the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL]. Inasmuch as the principle involved in each of the three amendments is identical, I respectfully ask unanimous consent that the amendments may be voted upon en bloc.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the question is on agreeing en bloc to the amendments.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays, and desire to be heard upon the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there a sufficient second to the request for the yeas and nays?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I desire to be heard in respect to these amendments, in view of the fact that a very considerable number of Senators are now on the floor who were not here at the time the previous discussion of the amendments occurred.

The amendments present the proposition that instead of having a provision, as the bill would otherwise provide, by which no accounting is to be made by the President, the Vice President, or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, of an expense allowance of, respectively, $50,000, $10,000, and $10,000 per annum, there shall be a requirement that an accounting shall be made by each of these respective officers of the amount granted as an expense allowance.

In addition, Mr. President, the amendments present this proposition: The bill itself, in the form presented, provides that there shall be, in addition to a salary of $100,000 to the President, an expense allowance of $50,000, regardless of whether any of it is spent, or regardless of how much of it is spent. The amendments, applicable to each of these respective three offices, provide for an allowance of not to exceed a specified amount, in the case of the President $50,000 per annum, in the case of the Vice President $10,000 per annum, and in the case of the Speaker of the House of Representatives $10,000 per annum, with a provision that an accounting shall be made by each of these respective officers, and that the respective allowances shall be payable in monthly installments on vouchers duly presented.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to read all three of the amendments, but I should like to have the indulgence of Senators while I read the one applicable to the President, and I can assure the Senators that the principle involved in each of the other two is identical with that in the one which I shall read.

I think it would be well to read first the provision of the bill itself, as now before the Senate, in respect to the President, and then the provision of the amendment. The bill provides:

> The President shall receive in full for his services during the term for which he shall have been elected compensation in the aggregate amount of $150,000 a year, to be paid monthly, consisting of $100,000 for salary and an expense allowance of $50,000 to assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which expense allowance no tax liability shall accrue and for which no accounting shall be made by him. He shall be entitled also to the use of the furniture and other effects belonging to the United States and kept in the Executive Mansion.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I heard the Senator's remarks, and I know how sincere he is in everything he says. This question arises in my mind: We of the Senate are allowed $2,500 in an expense account, payable in monthly installments. There is no requirement on us to make a return as to how we expend that $2,500, is there?

Mr. DONNELL. There is not, and I am glad the Senator asked the question, because earlier this afternoon we discussed the identical question on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. TOBEY. The only point in my mind is that the two are entirely similar. The principle is the same, is it not?

Mr. DONNELL. I think it is. There has been a suggestion by one of the Senators on the other side that there is a difference in principle with respect to the Executive provision and that applicable to the Congress. To my mind there is an inconsistency, and I shall be happy, if I may, to answer the inquiry, unless the Senator from New Hampshire desires to elaborate upon it.

Mr. TOBEY. I do not.

Mr. DONNELL. The same point, I may say, Mr. President, was raised earlier this afternoon by the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS], the then acting floor leader of the Democratic Members of the Senate, and the point was one which had occurred to the three of us who submitted the amendments, before their submission. I have now in my hand, and had upon my desk at the moment that the Senator from Illinois raised the question, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946. There is a provision in it which I should like to read:

> Effective on the day on which the Eightieth Congress convenes, there shall be paid to each Senator, Representative in Congress, Delegate from the Territories, Resident Commissioner from Puerto Rico, an expense allowance of $2,500 per annum to assist in defraying expenses relating to, or resulting from the discharge of his official duties, for which no tax liability shall incur, or accounting be made; such sum to be paid in equal monthly installments.

I take it, Mr. President, that the principle of what I have read from the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is precisely the same as that contained in the bill now pending before the Senate for consideration. I stated in response to the question of the Senator from Illinois that in my mind there is an inconsistency between the two positions, and that to my mind the position which we took, and for which I certainly voted, if there was a record vote, and certainly approved if there was no record vote, when we voted on the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, is not consistent with the proposition I am advocating this afternoon.

But my proposition, Mr. President, is that the action taken in 1946, insofar as it undertakes to grant an expense allowance and then provide no obligation for an accounting—indeed the act contains an affirmative provision that there shall be no accounting—was a mistaken type of legislation, and were the vote to occur again this afternoon I should oppose it just as I am opposing this provision in the pending bill.

I may say further that to my mind there should be introduced in the Senate of the United States an amendment to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 to correct what I deem to be an unwise piece of legislation.

Mr. MORSE rose.

Mr. DONNELL. I shall yield in just a moment to the Senator from Oregon.

In the third place, I may say that the provision in the Legislative Reorganization Act, which is therein set forth, to my mind should by proper legislation be changed in either one of two ways. Either that each Member of Congress shall be granted a salary of $12,500 plus an expense allowance, to be supported by vouchers, and to be paid only on vouchers, or if it be deemed just and proper to the Members of the Congress that there shall be a $12,500 portion of the salary which is subject to income tax, and a $2,500 portion of salary—not expense money—of salary, which is exempt, then we should state it, rather than stating it on the basis of an expense allowance not supported by vouchers.

I now yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I simply wish to add to what my good friend, the Senator from Missouri, has said, that under the parliamentary situation which existed when we debated the Reorganization Act of 1946, we either had to vote for the entire bill as it came back to us from conference or vote against it in the entirety. It is true that some of us objected to the particular principle in the Reorganization Act of 1946 which authorized a tax-exempt expense account for Senators. Earlier this afternoon we served notice that it was our intention to eliminate this principle of a tax-exempt expense account for United States Senators, by way of an amendment to the act. Our amendment will be offered in this session of Congress. However, as to the pending bill, I would point out that two wrongs never make a right. We have an opportunity here to stop the extension of the entire principle of tax-exempt expense acocunts for Government officeholders. Therefore, the amendments which we have offered merit approval.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I agree with the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Oregon that the Reorganization Act provision relating to expense allowances to Members of Congress should be corrected. However, I would point out that there is a difference between a provision for expense allowance for Members of Congress and a proposed expense allowance for the President. It is common knowledge that the expenses of a Member of Congress living in Washington amount to more than $2,500 a year, whereas it is evidenced by the reports submitted to the Congress that the expenses of the President have not amounted to $50,000 a year, and that any difference between the actual expenses and the $50,000 would constitute a tax-free increase in his salary. I am not going to vote against the bill if the amendment is not adopted. I simply want to point out that there is a difference because the expense of a Member of Congress amounts to considerable more than the $2,500 a year allowance. But it is wrong to have it written as it is in the Reorganization Act. It should be clean-cut expense allowance with expenses proved, or it should be a straight increase in salary.

Mr. DONNELL. Does not the Senator from Vermont believe that a similar clean-cut statement of an expense allowance, supported by vouchers for actual expenses incurred, would be a wholesome thing in the bill now pending on the floor of the Senate?

Mr. AIKEN. I will answer that by saying that I shall vote for the Senator's proposed amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. I may say to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] further that a similar suggestion came from the other side of the aisle, and I may say it came from a very distinguished member of the majority in whose opinion I have great confidence. I refer to the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], who made somewhat the same point, though perhaps slightly different, as that made by the Senator from Vermont. The point made by the Senator from Georgia, as I recall it, was that inasmuch as a large part of the services of Members of Congress are rendered away from home, obviously it is clear that we will incur expenses which, I think he said, every Member of the Senate would agree unquestionably do amount to more than $2,500. While to my mind that is a fact, I do not think it is consistent in one bill to say that there shall be an expense allowance without accounting, and in another bill that there shall be an expense allowance with accounting. I stand on the proposition that in every case where an expense allowance is given, as distinguished from compensation, there should be an accounting to the people of the United States for the money that is spent, and that the accounting should designate the purposes for which the expenditures were made.

Mr. TOBEY. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. As I understand the amendments submitted by the Senator from Missouri, they do not change the Reorganization Act. Do they?

Mr. DONNELL. They have no effect on the Reorganization Act.

Mr. TOBEY. But a moment ago the Senator from Missouri very constructively said that he did not believe in having one bill framed in one way and another bill dealing with a similar subject framed in another way. So if the Senator's amendments are adopted, will they not have that unhappy result? Will we not pass the bill now before us in one way, whereas the Reorganization Act was passed in the other way?

Mr. DONNELL. Which I think can be remedied by an amendment to the Reorganization Act.

Mr. TOBEY. That is true.

Mr. DONNELL. In that connection, if I may answer the Senator further, I will say that I am in thorough accord with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], who said that two wrongs never made a right, and that even though we made a mistake in 1946 in providing an expense allowance for Members of Congress without an accounting, we should not now do the same thing in this instance.

Mr. TOBEY. We have heard a great deal of talk lately with respect to the Taft-Hartley Act, and that action should be taken by Congress with respect to it, some contending that legislation on the subject matter should all be contained in one package, rather than to be embraced in two separate bills. The consensus of opinion seems to be that it should be acted upon in one package. Similarly, would not the Senator be of opinion that what he seeks to do by his amendments should apply to all alike, and that any change made should apply to Members of Congress as well as to the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker; in other words, that action should be taken in one package? If we adopt the Senator's amendment, we shall then impose upon the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives conditions which are not imposed upon Members of Congress under the Reorganization Act. There is no guaranty that legislation imposing those conditions on Members of Congress can be passed. The Chief Executive and the Presiding Officers of both branches of Congress will be in one position, and Members of Congress will be on a different basis. Is not that true?

Mr. DONNELL. I think the Senator is entirely correct; but I think we are confronted by the fact that as a practical matter we cannot at this time undertake to amend the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 and still provide the increase in salary for the President which is here advocated, and which doubtless has justification.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I point out to the Senator that this amendment takes nothing away from the President, because, as I understand, under existing law he is required to make an accounting.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from Vermont points out that the amendments now under discussion take nothing away from the President, because it is his understanding that the President is required to account for the $40,000 which he now receives. I may say in that connection that I am not certain whether he is required to account for the $40,000. I have not read that particular section. However, I am clear about the fact that the bill now before the Senate distinctly provides that he shall make no accounting for the $50,000 which it is proposed to grant him.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. Let me finish this one point before I overlook it.

The point was made a few moments ago by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] that the President has not in fact utilized all of the existing $40,000 allowance; that is to say, he has not spent the entire $40,000 per annum granted to him by existing law. Again I invite the attention of Senators, as I did earlier this afternoon, to the very clear statement on that question made on this floor this afternoon by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] in this language:

> The majority views of the committee have not explained to the Senate that although the President is authorized to have an entertainment and travel fund for his account of not less than $40,000, during the 2 years such authorization has existed, he has not used this amount, despite the national campaign intervening. For the fiscal year 1948 the President used only $32,039 of the $40,000 granted.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I promised to yield first to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. CAPEHART].

Although nearly $8,000 of the $40,000 allowance was not used in 1948 the bill undertakes to do what? According to its own language, it provides an expense allowance of $50,000—

> To assist—

It is not completely to cover the expenses, but to help, aid, or assist—

> To assist in defraying expenses relating to or resulting from the discharge of his official duties.

As the Senator from North Dakota has pointed out, notwithstanding the fact that the national campaign has intervened, the President has not found it necessary to use even the $40,000; yet it is proposed to give him $50,000 more to assist him—not to give him all he needs, but to help him with his expenses. Notwithstanding these facts, it is affirmatively provided that no accounting shall be made by him.

I now yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I have been absent from the Chamber during a part of the discussion. I am wondering if it has been suggested that possibly a better plan would be to give the President a salary which would net him the same amount as would the $50,000 expense item, which would be tax exempt, plus the $100,000 salary.

Perhaps a better plan would be to give him a salary which would net him $95,000. That would require a salary of between $400,000 and $450,000. The tax on a $100,000 salary for a married man, such as the present occupant of the White House, is $45,000. Therefore he would have $55,000 left. It is proposed to give him a $50,000 allowance which would not be taxable; so he would have $105,000 of net income or take-home pay, the kind that he could put in his pocket. We would have to give the President an additional $300,000 in salary, on top of the $150,000 we are talking about, to give him $105,000 which he could put in his own pocket.

Why would it not be better to increase the President's salary to $450,000, and let him pay income taxes, just as everyone else does? Would not that be more honest? Would it not be better? Then if income taxes should go down, as they possibly never will—let us pray that they will—the President would have more take-home pay, or more money that he could spend. I believe that the better plan would be simply to increase his salary to $450,000. If my figures are correct—and if they are not, I wish some Senator would correct them—he would then have $105,000 left after paying his taxes, which is exactly what would remain under the system of giving him $100,000, on which he would pay a tax of $55,000, and then giving him an allowance of $50,000 which would be nontaxable. The net result would be exactly the same as though we were to increase his salary to $450,000. That might be the better way to do it. I agree that the President's salary should be increased. I am wondering if an amendment will be offered to increase the President's salary to $450,000.

Mr. DONNELL. Let me answer the Senator from Indiana in this manner:

It is extremely interesting, I am sure, to those of us who were in the Chamber during the earlier portion of this debate, to recall the admirable and constructive address delivered today by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS], one of the sponsors of the amendment for which I am now arguing. He joined in sponsorship of the amendment after it was submitted.

Mr. WILLIAMS rose.

Mr. DONNELL. I see the Senator from Delaware on his feet. In a few moments no doubt we shall hear from him. He takes substantially the same position as does the able Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, had I known that, I would not have taken the time of the Senator. However, I thought that point should be brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. DONNELL. I am sure that it is always of value to the Senate to have the views of every Senator. The distinguished Senator from Indiana has a wide range of knowledge of business affairs, and he is adequately qualified to enlighten and assist us.

Before yielding to the Senator from Delaware, let me say that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] has indicated his desire to say a word.

Mr. LANGER. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. LUCAS. I respectfully suggest that we have a little order in debate, if we may.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To whom does the Senator from Missouri yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I point out to the Senator from Indiana that this afternoon I brought to the attention of the Senate the fact that the bill is an indirect method of achieving the result of giving the President take-home pay of approximately $100,000, and that in order to attain the same result we would have to raise the salary of the President to approximately $300,000.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further comment?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. The reason why I think it might be a better method is that when taxes do come down, if they ever do, under a $450,000 salary the President would have more take-home pay than we otherwise might give him.

Mr. DONNELL. Let me say that the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] pointed out very clearly this afternoon that there is real merit in calling the attention of the President of the United States to the tremendous burden of taxation existing today, as well as in having the rest of us realize something of that burden.

Mr. CAPEHART. I wonder whether the authors of the bill would care to tell us why they arrived at a figure of $50,000 without the payment of taxes, rather than a $450,000 straight salary. There must be some merit to it; otherwise, they would have arrived at a salary of $450,000 for the President, which would give him the same amount of take-home pay the pending bill would give him. Will the authors of the bill tell us why they did not propose a $450,000 straight salary?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I have no objection to having the authors of the bill make such a statement, but I think the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] is correct in saying that we should preserve ordinary debating order, and I think we shall make better progress if I am permitted to complete my statement, rather than to have an undisclosed Senator or Senators called upon now.

Mr. CAPEHART. May we have an opportunity to hear the authors of the bill state why they arrived at this method, rather than the method of increasing the salary of the President to approximately $450,000, which would give him the same amount of take-home pay that is proposed by the pending bill?

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me——

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LUCAS. Let me suggest that we hope to stay here tonight until we finish action on this bill. I am merely apprising Senators who may contemplate leaving of that fact.

Mr. President, I feel sure that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] will answer the argument and question propounded by the Senator from Indiana. If the Senator from Maryland does not do so, I shall, because the argument the Senator from Indiana is making is utterly fallacious.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. Let me say to the Senator from Illinois—I do not know whether he is the majority leader or not, although, of course, he hopes to be—that he starts out, already in the session, by saying that the Senator from Indiana is trying to do something that is not right.

Mr. LUCAS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. CAPEHART. I say we have a perfect right to ask the authors of the bill why they arrived at the conclusion they did reach. I say there is some sinister motive on the part of the authors of the bill, with the result that they are not willing to disclose why they arrived at that proposal.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri will permit me to reply——

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course, my friend, the Senator from Indiana, made a very far-reaching statement when he said there was a sinister motive back of the bill.

I had nothing to do with the taking of the testimony in the committee; I am not even a member of the committee. All I said was that the argument of the Senator from Indiana is a fallacious one. If he takes exception to the use of that word, I will say his argument is an incorrect one. The facts will appear in due course. The Senator from Indiana should not become excited about that statement, and he should not charge those responsible for this bill with having sinister motives. I am certain he has committed a grievous error, because he includes some of his own Republican colleagues.

Mr. CAPEHART. All I say——

Mr. LUCAS. I ask the Senator to wait just a moment; the Senator from Missouri has been kind enough to yield to me.

Let me say I can understand how the Senator from Indiana might make such a charge against some Senators on this side of the aisle, but I suggest he apologize to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], who sits on the Republican side of the aisle, and who is one of the most conscientious and honest Members of the Senate, as well as to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN], who is absent at this time and cannot now protect himself, although I am sure some Republican Senator will defend the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois said I was fallacious in this matter, and he was intimating that I was not sincere about it. All I say is that it is a repetition of what occurred in the last Congress. When they do not want to be frank and do not want to answer questions correctly, they charge someone else with insincerity. I said exactly what I intended to say, and if it applies to any Senator on this side of the aisle, I am sorry.

Mr. LUCAS and Mr. FLANDERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Missouri yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield first to the Senator from Illinois, and then I shall yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I regret that my friend the Senator from Indiana simply did not hear what I said. I did not charge him with any insincerity. I simply said I thought he was making a fallacious argument. If he objects to the use of that word, then I should say he was making an incorrect argument. If he objects to the use of that word, then I withdraw the statement entirely, because I would not want to offend my friend the Senator from Indiana in the opening days of this Congress. Perhaps later I might if I feel justified.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, if I misunderstood the Senator from Illinois, I apologize.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, the part of the bill which apparently, from what I have been able to learn from the newspapers, is to be the only part which will be passed before January 20, was not in the original bill. The so-called authors of this bill originally did not have in it anything with relation to the President, the Vice President, or the Speaker of the House. The provision referring to the President, the Vice President, and the Speaker of the House, which was put into the bill by the so-called authors of the bill, was put in at the suggestion and with the advice of that sterling New Deal Democrat, ex-President Hoover, and in exactly the terms he suggested. He told us that his Commission had given a great deal of thought to this particular question. We had not. We are giving thought to it now, evidently. But these are the recommendations of the Hoover Commission.

Two or three misunderstandings are current among the Members of the Senate now in the Chamber. Under present conditions, the President has a $40,000 expense account for travel and entertainment. That has nothing to do with the ordinary expenses of the White House. It has nothing to do with any other of the President's expenses here in Washington. It was Mr. Hoover's estimate—after having some experience; of course, whether he applied the inflationary ratio to it, I do not know—that it costs at least between $25,000 and $30,000 a year to conduct the White House. That money comes out of the President's own pocket.

Senators talk about take-home pay of $95,000, but there is no such thing for the President of the United States. An official of a business firm getting a salary of, let us say, $105,000—mention was made of such a sum—could live as simply or as elaborately as he pleased. He could have his wife cook his breakfast, his luncheon, and his dinner and they could live in one of the new $9,000 five-room houses; or they could spend every cent they had, and could borrow more. But that is not possible for the President of the United States. Although I am not one of the authors of this bill, in the sense of having originally proposed or originally worked out with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] these provisions for the President of the United States, nevertheless I was strongly impressed, as were the Senator from Maryland and the Senator from Connecticut, by the experience and advice of ex-President Hoover and by the thought that he and those working with him had given to this matter; and we were glad to put the provision into the bill, and I am glad to support it.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. I merely wish to address a question or two to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. Does the Senator from Vermont know of any of the White House expenses to which he has referred in his remarks that could not very well and simply be listed in an accounting by the President of the United States? Does he know of any reason why they should not be listed in an accounting by the President of the United States?

Mr. FLANDERS. He does account for the $40,000.

Mr. MORSE. I am speaking of the $50,000 covered by the bill.

Mr. FLANDERS. So I come to the $50,000. It could be done. Without any doubt, it would require an accounting department, because it is made up of an enormous number of small bills. But an accounting department could be set up, and it could be done.

Mr. DONNELL. He does account for the $40,000, does he not?

Mr. FLANDERS. He accounts for travel, and he accounts for entertainment.

Mr. DONNELL. What kind of accounting does he make, may I ask the Senator?

Mr. FLANDERS. I will read the statement.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well.

Mr. FLANDERS. I read:

> There may be expended for or on account of the traveling expenses of the President of the United States such sums as Congress may from time to time appropriate, not exceeding $40,000 per annum such sum when appropriated to be expended in the discretion of the President and accounted for on his certificate solely.

As we heard today, he does not always use that $40,000.

Mr. MORSE. Will the Senator yield, that I may ask the Senator one more question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield, Mr. President, for the purpose of a question to be addressed to the Senator.

Mr. MORSE. Does the Senator from Vermont agree with me that it is apparent that the real purpose of the bill is to increase the President's salary, not only the $25,000 in the new $100,000 figure but an additional flat $50,000, and give him, as to that amount, tax exemption? Is not that the underlying purpose of the bill?

Mr. FLANDERS. The purpose of the bill, yes, is that he shall have tax exemption on the expenses incident to his office.

Mr. MORSE. But he is to have tax exemption on the amount of money under the name of "expenses," when the fact is that the total salary he is going to get will be $150,000. Why do we not call it what it really is?

Mr. DONNELL. I emphasize, Mr. President, that the answer of the Senator from Vermont to the query by the Senator from Oregon is obviously correct, because the framers of this very bill, before they ever got down to the expression "expense allowance," called the entire $150,000 "compensation."

It is perfectly clear, Mr. President, that the purpose of the framers of the bill was to do exactly what the Senator from Oregon says, to give the President $150,000, and to call $50,000 of it expense allowance, and to free him from the obligation of making an accounting, which by the very terms of the act now in effect with respect to the $40,000 he is required to make.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. BREWSTER. I am glad the Senator brought up the point, as I have prepared an amendment which I shall offer at the proper time, designed to meet it. It seemed to me originally that we should use the language on the first page of the bill, saying that the President should have compensation in the amount of $150,000. My amendment will provide that he shall have compensation in the amount of $100,000, and, in addition, an expense account.

I do not know about Missouri, but I know in my own State of Maine, which is a rather frugal State, there was allowed the Governor, during my period of service, an expense account at that time of $10,000, for which an accounting was not required. I think that very many States—we have many governors here—have followed that practice, so I was not particularly disturbed that this amount, on the recommendation of Mr. Hoover, was proposed. But I certainly think the language of the bill should be clarified. I have discussed it with some of the authors, and they say it is entirely agreeable to insert that change.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. In just one moment, if I may finish. In reference to the contribution made by the Senator from Maine to the discussion, I may call to his attention the fact that in the respect to which he refers, the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 is not guilty of the same fallacy of language as is the bill now before us, because the $12,500 allowed to the Senators and Representatives is what is therein termed the "compensation," whereas the other $2,500 is distinctly referred to as an "expense allowance," and is not included within the term "compensation."

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from Maine is precisely correct, as I see it, in taking the view that Senate bill 103, which is now before us, is in error in calling the $50,000 compensation.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I promised to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I should like to address an observation to the Senator from Vermont. It may not be pertinent, but it may not do any harm. On the testimony given in my presence this afternoon, reference has been made to the $40,000 allowance for travel which the President had. He had, did he not, $40,000 for travel?

Mr. DONNELL. He was entitled to it.

Mr. TOBEY. He was entitled to it?

Mr. DONNELL. May I answer that?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. And the Senator from North Dakota stated that during the 2 years such authorization has existed, he has not used that amount, despite the national campaign intervening.

Mr. TOBEY. Exactly. That is my point.

Mr. DONNELL. Pardon me just a moment. For the fiscal year 1948 he used, so the Senator from North Dakota tells us, only $32,039.

Mr. TOBEY. Will the Senator hold that a minute?

Mr. DONNELL. I hold it.

Mr. TOBEY. I address my remarks jointly to the distinguished Senator from Missouri and to the distinguished Senator from Vermont. If the President of the United States, Harry Truman, with a $40,000 expense account for travel assured him under the law, only spent $32,000 and won the election by 303 electoral votes, I ask the Senators, as authorities, how big a majority he would have had in the electoral college had he spent the whole $40,000?

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, although the Senator, with his clarity and beauty of expression, has perhaps somewhat appealed to the jocularity of certain Members of the Senate, I undertake to say there is a lot in what he says, because if the President of the United States with an expenditure of $32,000 can carry this country as he did, how much more would he be able to exert by way of effective influence, perhaps, with an expenditure of $90,000, without obligation to account for the $50,000?

Mr. TOBEY. That is a political logarithm, is it not?

Mr. DONNELL. It is, and it is to the *n*th degree.

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. DONNELL. I think it is decidedly in point in this case.

I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I am thankful for the opportunity of getting down to something I can understand. We have in the original bill this section, which I will now read. I refer to the original bill as we presented it for examination by the General Accounting Office.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator, if he will pardon me for a moment, does he know whether or not in the amount accounted for by the President in the fiscal year 1948, this $32,000, in round figures, there is any item for a special train carrying the President of the United States on a nonpolitical trip earlier in 1948 to the western area of the country?

Mr. FLANDERS. I do not know, and I would suggest that that inquiry be addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments. I am not informed.

Mr. DONNELL. Very well.
